Marchers were organized for the first time according to profession and not formally introduced on entering the square, as in previous years. There was little of the usual cheering.

Short speeches from local and national trade union leaders referred to the country's economic crisis and expressed trepidation about the effect on workers' living standards of the reform programme. Ban-ners, clearly ordered and distributed by the trade unions, urged price controls, no unemployment and called for an end to economic 'experiments".

Security was strict all day, with thousands of extra police and soldiers drafted into the city. Checks began at the outermost ring road and ended with no fewer than five checks on identity papers and invitation cards for those

Interior Ministry troops and regular soldiers were much in evidence, and all possible entrances to the square were barricaded with lorries and buses immediately after each group of demonstrators had heen allowed through. Witnesses disagreed about whether President Gorbachov's exit had been planned to coincide with the end of television coverage or came in response to the barracking and hostile banners. The demonstrators interpreted the leaders' departure as a humiliation, and that version rapidly gained currency.

Pier Giorgio was a far cry from the ecclesiastical stiffness and melancholy philosophies usually associated with candidates for beatification, the first step before canonization and sainthood.

He died in Turin in 1925, aged 24, not before, however, The Times in a dispatch from its Milan correspondent in the early 1920s had praised "Signor Pier Giorgio Frassati" for defending his father from an attack by Italian fascists. "The mob was seen off by this energetic young man's timely intervention," The Times

This was not Frassati's only connection with the press. His father was the founder and owner of La Stampa, the Italian daily. Deeply opposed to Mussolini's blackshirts, his house was often the target of demonstrators.

Born into a privileged and wealthy family, Frassati lived his life to the fullest, his good looks attracting countless female admirers. Happiest scaling a mountain or organizing a party - one picture has him clutching a whisky bottle and wearing a paper hat - he was at first glance the archetypal young blade of the 1920s.

Rail union leaders accept 9.3%

By Tim Jones Employment Affairs Correspondent

THE threat of another summer of rail strikes effectively vanished yesterday when leaders of the two main rail unions, representing more than 100,000 workers, accepted British Rail's offer of a 9.3 per cent rise over 11

In reaching the settlement, which will add £140 million to British Rail's wages bill, the unions effectively allowed the 8.8 per cent settlement, achieved last year after a series of disruptive strikes, to be stretched into a 13th month, and British Rail will be able to present it as adding only 8.6 per cent to its wages bill.

Although union leaders had aimed for the 10.2 per cent benchmark achieved by Ford workers, grassroots soundings indicated that members were in no mood for another fight if a deal above the rate of inflation could be achieved.

The settlement, which has to be accepted by the members, is welcome news for the Government although ministers are concerned at the 11. per cent figure achieved by British Steel workers and fear that more than 600,000 town hall staff are ready for a fight over a 15 per cent demand.

Mr Jimmy Knapp, the general secretary of the National Union of Railwaymen said: "I believe we have reached a settlement which NUR members will recognize as reasonable". However, members of the second biggest rail union, the TSSA, which repre-sents administrative grades, were still discussing last night whether to accept the offer. Their members already work a 37-hour week and are pressing for more money if the other unions, currently on 39 hours, achieve that target.

Mr Derrick Fullick, general secretary of Aslef, the drivers' union, said: "The executives of both unions recognized that we have reached the end of the road over pay.

The NUR and Asief reiected the board's offer of a "route forward" towards a reduction in the basic working week and decided instead to press for more negotiation for a 35-hour week.

Under the new deal, a railman's weekly pay rises £9.80 to £115.10 (made up to £127.75 by payment of a supplement), a conductor's (guard) £12.10 to £142.20, a top-rated signalman's £16.80 to £197.45 and a train driver's

Gummer goes tooth and claw for vegetarians

By Michael Hornsby Agriculture Correspondent

VEGETARIANISM is a "wholly unnatural" practice without support in biblical teaching, according to Mr John Gummer, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Addressing an audience at Butchers' Hall in the City yesterday Mr Gummer, who is a member of the General Synod of the Church of England, said: "I consider meat to be an essential part of the diet. The Bible tells us that we are masters of the fowls of the air and the beasts of the field, and we very properly eat them.

"If the Almighty had wanted us to have three stomachs (like grass-eating cattle), I am sure he could have arranged it, but he chose to make us omnivores instead." Mr Gummer, speaking at the biennial luncheon of the International Meat Trade Association, drew enthusiastic applause from an audience mainly of butchers and meat merchants. He said he was tired of reading in the press about the 10 per cent of the population who had turned vegetarian or reduced their meat intake. "I want to see more articles about the sensible 90 per cent who are still eating meat." Warming to his theme, he said it was time to go on the offensive against "deeply undemocratic food faddists who want to impose on the rest of us views which come from their own inner psyches". Food was becoming a "religion substitute" which enabled people "to make themselves feel more moral by the diet they choose".

He said he particularly resented those who encourage children to become vegetarian on grounds which have nothing to do with truth and everything to do with prejudice" - a reference to a video which the Vegetarian Society has been showing in secondary schools since last December. Miss Juliet Gellatley, the society's head of youth education, immediately retorted: "It is a totally factual video, and much of the information in it comes from Mr Gummer's own ministry. It looks at the way animals are kept and slaughtered, health and nutrition asperts, and the effect of meat-eating in affluent countries on the developing world, which is forced to grow grain to feed Western animals."

The British Chicken Information Service, meanwhile, reported yesterday that chicken in 1989 was Britain's most popular meat for the second consecutive year, pushing red meat into second place. It said chicken now had 31 per cent of the meat market in volume terms, compared with 29 per cent for beef, 17 for lamb, 16 for pork and 7 per cent for other types of poultry.

STRICTER vetting of contract security guards patrolling British military bases is to be demanded by the Commons defence committee in the wake of last year's bomb attack on the Royal Marines school in Deal, Kent.

Mr Tom King, the Secretary of State for Defence, told the Commons defence select committee yesterday that the Shackletons, whose American replacements were scheduled to arrive next year, were extremely valuable. He was speaking in response to a question by Mr Bruce George, Labour MP for Walsall South, who said: "I understand that one of the Shackletons in Manchester space museum was withdrawn from that museum and brought back to service, I understand that age was not a factor in the accident yesterday, but can you give us some assurance that elderly

The Shackletons have proved that they are extremely valuable." He denied that they were grounded yesterday. The RAF confirmed they had all been checked and cleared.

No mayday message was received from the stricken plane, which because of its age could not take a black box flight recorder. Half-eaten sandwiches, strewn about wreckage, suggested the accident came as a total surprise to the crew. Last night, it emerged that

Jail action threat over relocation

By Quentin Cowdry Home Affairs Correspondent

JAILS yesterday were facing a renewed threat of industrial action after the prison officers union abruptly walked out of talks with the Home Office and declared itself to be in formal dispute.

The walkout, just minutes after the meeting began, came when the department refused to negotiate with the union over the relocation of prisoners from the riot-affected Strangeways jail in Manchester.

Mr John Bartell, the union's chairman, accused the Home Office of breaching alleged promises that important operational issues arising from the riot would be settled jointly by the union and management.

"Agreements have been dishonoured," Mr Bartell said. "Troublesome prisoners are being dispersed with no account of problems they cause."

The union's national executive is to meet tomorrow to discuss the dispute, including possible industrial action.

long-stay hospital was found. The jury had been told that Mr Sartin, aged 23, was suffering from acute schizophrenia - which he may have developed at the age of 13 or 14 when he took his father's expressing sympathy for Mr shotgun on April 30 last year Macintosh's widow and the and, dressed all in black, other victims. It added: "It is wandered through the streets of Monkseaton, Tyne and Wear, firing as he went. After 20 minutes, Mr Kenneth Macintosh lay dead and 17 other people had been wounded. The court had been told that Mr Sartin fired two shots at Mr Macintosh knocking him to the ground. As his victin begged for help, the gunman was alleged to have replied: "No. It is your day to die," and fired two more shots, killing him instantly.

Mr David Robson, QC, for the prosecution, said that Mr Sartin had developed a macabre interest in horror and the occult, amassing a collection of books about Nazi any kind." concentration camps, mass murder and torture. He had also visited Hungerford, scene of the mass killing by Michael Ryan. Mr Sartin, it was said, had claimed that a man called Michael inhabited his mind and issued commands. Voices in his head also told him to kill his parents.

Mr Robson said Mr Sartin was a loner, quiet and shy, but beneath that exterior ran "a very dark river" which had broken to the surface with a "terrible reality". What caused the sudden and devastating explosion would probably never be known.

Yesterday, Mr James Chadwin, QC, representing Mr Section said the probabilities were that his client's mental state would deteriorate so drastically and sharply that long before any trial could be concluded, it would have to be aborted and the jury discharged. All three doctors who had given evidence took the view that a trial would achieve nothing positive, he said, and the defence supported the prosecution's view that Mr Sartin should not stand trial.

The judge said it was an exceptional, perhaps unique, case. There had been only one other comparable incident resulting from schizophrenia in the UK: the massacre at Hungerford. Mr Justice Waite added: "No one could fail to be moved by the elements of tragedy in this case affecting both those who suffered bereavement, fright or phys-ical injury on the victims' side, and those on the perpetrator's side who have undergone the shock and horror of a loved one suddenly turned by extremes of illness into a mindless assassin."

Hacker 'caused £25,000 damage'

By Nick Nuttall, Technology Correspondent

THE TIMES WEDNESDAY MAY 2 1990

A YOUTH calling himself "the mad hacker" caused more than £25,000 worth of damage to university computer systems after "breaking in" and sabotaging files, a jury at Southwark Crown Court was told yesterday.

Nicholas Whiteley, then aged 19, used a personal computer to enter the national academic computer network, in what police allege is the biggest hacking case of its kind. He penetrated data bases at St Mary's College, London University, and Bath and Hull universities, replacing valuable information with schoolboy humour, it is alleged. Miss Joanna Korner for the

Rich wife 'risks jail' for £7,000 crime trail

THE wife of a millionaire bus inessman was threatened with jail yesterday after an illegal spending spree in London and the south of France.

Over a five-month period, Mrs Wendy Lipton, whose husband, Gerald, owns the Chinacraft chain of shops in central London, tricked top shops out of designer clothes worth more than £7,000, using stolen cheque and credit cards, after raiding a locker at her golf club in Surrey.

When police caught up with her, the rich housewife blamed her offences on a skin dis-order, Horseferry Road Magistrates' Court was told.

Mr Michael Burdette, for the prosecution, said: "There is no financial reason why she committed the offences.

He said: "She offered no explanation for it, except to say that she was suffering from a skin disorder for which she required treatment."

Mr Vivian Robinson, QC for Lipton, asked Mr David Meier, the magistrate, to adjourn the case so that her doctor could give evidence.

There is ... a highly signifi-cant medical background to this case, which explains what would otherwise be a totally inexplicable series of acts," Mr Robinson said.

Lipton, aged 44, of St John's Wood, north London, admitted stealing a jewellery pouch and contents worth £1,860 from Mrs Jeanne Kicks at the Coombe Hill golf club, last June, stealing a cheque book, and deception offences.

Goods obtained included a £345 silk blouse and a £1,200 Kashmir cape.

Mr Meier adjourned the case for a social inquiry report. He granted bail to Lipton and told her: "You are in danger of a custodial sentence. I make no bones about that."

The Home Office is being cautious. Apart from the risk of one programme interfering with another, ministers believe a local Channel 5 could clash with proposals already in the Bill to have local microwave or cable television.

Monday's performance at the Lyttleton Theatre was called off half way through when a wooden tree which needed to be "flown" off stage on pulleys fell from its book.

It was the third incident at the National in a week leading to the stoppage of a performance, and the second for the Sondheim musical, Last Monday part of another piece of scenery, an iron weightbar, became dislodged.

The next day in the neighbouring Olivier Theatre, Peter Wood, the director, halted a performance of his production of School for Scandal when a hydraulic jack broke down, preventing the revolving stage from moving.

THE Royal National Theatre performance of the Stephen Sondheim musical Sunday in the Park with George was cancelled last night to allow an investigation after a piece of falling scanary parcounty the performance and cancel last night's to allow the whole of the complicated set to be examined. Ticket-holders were being offered refunds. It is expected that today's scheduled matines performance of cancelled last night to allow an investigation after a piece of falling scenery narrowly missed an actor during a Sunday in the Park with George will go ahead.

"We have to make sure that everything is completely safe," a theatre spokesman said. "It is an extremely complicated set which requires large flats to fly off and on stage. The show had been on for 52 performances and on for 52 performances and there seemed no reason why the bar should suddenly be ripped loose on the fifth-third.

"Nor is there any explanation for why the tree should have come loose, but there is no question of sabotage. It has simply been bad luck, but we can take no chances".

The incidents at the theatre and elsewhere are being taken up by Equity, the actors' union. It said yesterday that a new working party involving the union, representatives of Monday night a meeting of the stage staff and theatre manactors took place and the agers, has been set up to look

A mercantile city brought down by craze for change

KING Edward III, in 1373, Bristol's energy that once went turned Bristol into a county, into commerce and industry separate from Somerset and Gloucestershire. Almost ex- 30 years into development and actly 600 years later, Mr construction. Richard West Edward Heath merged Bristol into a new county called Avon, taking in Bath. Westonsuper-Mare and various other places, which greatly resented their new status.

Both Bristol and Avon councils have now been ratecapped because, so the Government says, they have been overspending. But the creation of Avon, adding an extra tier of administrative bureaucracy, means that people have are so green "all the potatoes to pay more for their local government, whether they do that in income tax, rates or the new community charge.

If the Government really wanted to solve its present difficulties, it could simply abolish Avon and all those tiers of bureaucracy, returning again to the old system when only householders paid any rates or had a vote in local

Battle of the parties

A THIRD of the council is up for election this year in Bristol. The city is controlled by Labour, which holds 37 seats. The Conservatives have 24 seats and the Social and Liberal Democrats have five. Two vacant seats are also being contested. All parties are fighting all 25 seats. Labour is defending the majority of seats - 15 in all. The Conservatives are fighting to hold on to eight seats and the SLD is defending only two. The Greens are hopeful of scoring at least one victory at the polls. They are contesting all the seats up this year.

'Corruption row' embroils council on eve of poll

LABOUR yesterday sought to sink Tory hopes of holding on to the flagship London boring local Conservatives and ministers of "corruption" in the allocation of Whitehall grant to the authority.

Westminster has set a poll tax of £195 - the second lowest in London after Wandsworth - and its fate in council elections tomorrow is central to the Government's case for the community charge. If the Tories, who have a majority of only four seats, beat off the Labour challenge and buck the national trend, ministers will be able to argue that it is the level of the charge, not the underlying principle of a flat-rate tax, that

Yesterday, Dr John Cunningham, Labour's campaign co-ordinator, produced leaked papers which, he said, contained evidence of "corruption" involving local To-ries and ministers to "gerrymander" the election Westminster had illegally used ratepayers' money to hire a firm of lobbyists to conduct a high-powered persuasion ex-ercise stretching all the way to the Prime Minister.

In a bizarre twist, Lady Porter, leader of Westminster council, initially denied the allegations about hiring the firm of lobbyists but then retracted her remarks. A spokesman said she had been caught unawares and that the council had spent under £5,000 on hiring GJW, a firm of lobbyists, to make its case to the Government over the safety net and the council's need for extra money for services to tourists, commuters and shoppers to make up for that lost through the introduction of the uniform business rate. He said that Mr Paul Dimoldenberg, leader of the Labour group, worked for Good Relations, a lobbying firm previously associated with GJW.

The Department of the Environment denied that Westminster had been given special treatment, and Mr Barry Legg, the Tory chief whip for the council, dismissed the claims as a 'desperate pre-election gim-

Dr Cunningham said: "The purpose of this conspiracy has been to manipulate the eventual level of the poll tax in Westminster, and almost certainly in Wandsworth and Bradford, too, for the simple political objective of retaining political control as a squalid political exercise.

"Now we have the evidence which confirms our suspicions that this has been deliberately manipulated with the misdirection of public funds and the very partial and special treatment given to these Tory boroughs simply to try to buy another four years in power. Ministers have clearly been involved, as has 10 Downing Street ... lobbyists have clearbeen employed by the council at the ratepayers' expense." He added that Westminster had been given an extra £25 million - worth £185 a person in lower poll-tax bills as a result of the lobbying exercise. "This is corruption." Mr Legg replied: "In com-mon with hundreds of other councils, of course, we lobby the Government about the £75 safety net and the cost to our charge-payers of servicing a million commuters, tourists and shoppers who pour into Westminster every day."

There were four documents produced by Labour, including reports of meetings and one making direct reference to the Prime Minister. It said: "The Prime Minister is the last resort. She should only be invoked when all arguments have failed to persuade DoE ministers of the rightness of Westminster's case.

The department rejected the claims and denied that Westminster had behaved improperly. "Westminster's grant was calculated on precisely the same basis as applied to other authorities," it said.

Conservative Central Office denied there had been special treatment.

Libel damages for MP

SIR Hector Monro, Conservative MP for Dumfries, accepted substantial undisclosed damages at the High Court in London yesterday in settle-ment of his libel action against the League Against Cruel

Mr Michael Grieve, for Sir Hector, told Mr Justice Michael Davies that the league, which campaigned for the abolition of all forms of hunting and other field sports, had also unreservedly withdrawn imputations in an article published in its newspaper Wildlife Guardian in November 1987.

The article contained allegations over the circumstances of Sir Hector's leaving the government in 1981 when he was Parliamentary Under-Secretary at the Department the Environment. Mr recognized the damage caused to Sir Hector and had published a full apology in a recent edition of Wildlife

Mr Tom Hart, for the league, which is to pay Sir Hector's legal costs, said the officers and members regretted that the wholly unjustified statements were ever made. The society's present staff were not associated with the publication of the offending

The union is guest" cask-conditioned ale, buying it direct from an proposal by GrandMet, one of the big five brewers, to review the rents of its 4,238 tenants because of the "new retail opportunity" in the Government order.

The monopolies commission originally proposed that the big five - Allied-Lyons, Bass, Courage, GrandMet and Whitbread - should be required to reduce the total number of tenancies to just 2,000 each. The report added that a tenant should be allowed to carry one guest beer, which would have given publicans access to the boom market in lager. Pressure applied inside and outside of Parliament by the brewing lobby, however, fi-nally left the companies with all their properties and left tenants with only the opportunity of carrying at least one cask-conditioned ale outside the brewery-supplied portfolio.

Mr Ken Hollingworth, who runs Ye Olde Green Dragon, an Allied-owned house at Shenfield, Essex, estimated that even that concession could mean the big five losing up to a fifth of their cask-conditioned sales.

"I have been carrying two guest beers, Adnams and Greene King, for some time. Both were supplied via Allied but, when I said I was thinking of buying in one of them direct myself, the company said it would stop supplying me with the other one," Mr Hollingworth, chairman of the Allied Tenants' Group, said.

"There was also the threat of a rent review, but we took legal action and Allied starting what the position is at the moment but I am talking to other brewers this week to see what they have to offer."

Regional brewers have been offering various inducements, including free or cut-price ales, over the past two months in the hope that tenants would jump on their beer wagon. Apart from GrandMet, the national brewers have started offering to supply their ten-ants with a range of guest beers, the brew depending on regional preferences

The Campaign for Real Ale, meanwhile, has been waging its own publicity campaign, urging publicans to go their own way but, so far, tenants appear to be waiting for the dust to settle.

"It sounds a good opportunity but it is scarcely worthwhile increasing your range if, at the end of the day, your extra profits are going to be taken away in higher rents. Most tied houses are still biding their time, seeing if the whole thing is going to be commercially viable," Mr commercially

Tommy the Hat will sweet-talk tourists for a free pint

By Harvey Elliott

TOMMY the Hat, who on most days can be found sitting in his favourite corner at the bar of his local drinking pints of bitter and playing a mean game of dominoes, has found himself in the front line of the battle to persuade foreign visitors, especially Americans, to see more of the "real Britain".

Tommy, like hundreds of other pub regulars, has been spotted as a potential crowd puller and in return for free pints at the Granary Hotel, Amble, Northumberland, has been breed of "professional" locals, pro-vided he teaches visitors how to play darts and dominoes, speaks the dialect, reminisces about the good old days and allows them to sit in his corner while they take photographs for the folks back home.

The idea of recruiting the regulars came to Mr David Hayes, director of Wayfarer Inns, which looks after the marketing for independent country pubs, inns and small hotels, after he studied the results of a survey among American travel wanted to see and experience in Britain. Nearly 75 per cent of those questioned said their clients would like to sample country inns and pubs if only they could book such things in advance and were guaranteed the chance of sampling the local life.

He wrote to all group members from Devon to Scotland suggesting that they recruit their local character to act as some kind of ambassador and provide the touch of authentic colour tourists so often seek but rarely find. The response has been overwhelming. It seems that Britain is full of the likes of Tommy who would love to earn themselves free pints for a half-hour char.

"This is a very serious proposition," Mr Hayes said. "The inns who belong to our group have between five and 15 bedrooms and really represent the true picture of rural Britain. We want them to earn their beer, however."

Tommy, nicknamed "the hat" because of the woolly hat he wears incessantly, will also have to hand over a recipe for his favourite family dish, which in his case is rabbit pie. identify the main items of local gossip and news and describe beauty spots in the immediate area.

For Tommy, a retired coal-miner of indeterminate age, that will present few problems because he has always lived in and around Amble and loves to gossip anyway. If he and his fellow regulars can woo the tourists and persuade them to pay up to £75 a night for a double room in an old inn the chances are that they will be rewarded with far more than the odd free pint.

Thatcher refuses to be drawn on poll tax legislation

THE Prime Minister refused to be drawn into saying during question time whether the Government would legislate to modify the community charge in the present session of Parliament.

Mr Neil Kinnock said that poll tax would have to be abolished - "even if it means the Prime Minister goes down with her own flegship". He opened by asking: Will she tell us whether or not she is going to introduce legislation to change poll tax in this session of Parliament? Mrs Margaret Thatcher: When in fact we have a statement, we shall make it. It will be far more detailed and thorough than any we have had from him (Labour protests). Mr Kinnock: Does she not weeks ago that she thought commu-nity charge will be very popular? Does she still believe that and, if so, why is she sending ministers off in every direction, desperately searching for an escape route from poll tax?

Mrs Thatcher: Community charge is a much fairer charge (Labour laughter and interrup-tions)... and a far fairer charge than the alternative roof tax.

I notice that when Mr Kinnock gave an interview on April 21, it says this: "Mr Kinnock then gave a strong indication of his own thinking" (Conservative laughter).

He said: "The tax base for rates was imputed rents and that's one thing we can take into account now and bung into the computer".

She said: Does he not know the

Mrs Thatcher: Of course adjust-ments will have to be made and we are looking to see what they have to be. If there is any confusion, it is in the minds of local Labour authori-

Misa Emma Nicholson (West Devon and Torridge, C) said that because only 19 million people had paid rates and 36 million were now liable to pay for local services, the charge was already infinitely fairer. Mrs Thatcher: She is correct. More than 70 per cent of people in a poll said that they believed that everybody should make some contribution to local government spending. That is precisely what community charge does, with more generous rebates than ever, and generous rebates on transitional relief.

It is much fairer than rates or roof

Dr David Owen: Is banding of the poll tax one of the adjustments she has in mind, so that people can pay on the basis of their ability to pay, or is the Prime Minister opposed to that in prusciple? Or are there perhaps she will enumerate them?

Mrs Thatcher: Those who cannot afford to pay get very generous community charge rebates, more generous than ever before. About nine million people benefit from

Stance on sovereignty wins wide support

THE Prime Minister's stance at the Dublin summit last week, when she made clear her determ- exercise only marginal influence powers of the House of Commons in any moves towards political union in Europe, was widely supported when she reported.

"Is in now not plain that the Prime Minister has made herself a mere spectator, the lame duck of the Community and she has only herself to blame?" ination to defend the ported when she reported to MPs yesterday.

Mrs Margaret Thatcher told Madrid summit. the Commons that there were widely differing views at the summit on what political union covered. She had pointed out that the term raised anxities about loss of national identity, national sovereignty and national institutional sovereignty and national institutional source and ional institutions.

She added: "I suggested that the positive way forward lay instead through ever closer cooperation among mentions and reform of the Community's existing institutions to make them more effective and more efficient. He was told by Mr Archie Hamilton, Minister of State for the Armed Forces, that until the investigations of a board of inquiry were complete, it would not be appropriate to speculate about the accident's causes. Mr Rogers said that the ground crews had a tremen-dously difficult task in keeping

THE scarcely believable news was around Moscow within the hour: "We drove them out", "They couldn't stand it": "We won", people chattered to each other. At 11.30 on May Day morning, as grey clouds replaced the early sunshine. President Gorbachov and his party ended their public expression of solidarity with the Soviet and international working class and waiked silently from Red Square to shouts of "Shame" and whistles of derision.

For the previous half-hour, the President and his group had stood on top of the Lenin mausoleum facing a multicoloured crowd of banner-waving enthusiasts. Confronted with this part-happy, part-angry crowd, the official group looked calm, if solemn, but after a rustle of consultation and a glance at the television cameras, which were winding down their live coverage, they left.

privacy, Mrs Raisa Gorbachov talked animatedly to Mr Yuri Prokofyev, the Moscow Communist Party leader, with Moscow Communist Party leader out whose recommendation the demonstration would not have been permitted and whose job may now be on the line. Mr Prokofyev then spent several minutes in conversation with Mr Gavril Popov, the new Mayor of Moscow - whose appearance on the platform earlier had been hailed with chants of "Well done" - "Mo-lo-dets ... Mo-lo-dets"- but neither reappeared to calm the crowd.

The demonstrators wound their way through Red Square, along a complex of crowd-control corridors formed by police and plain-clothes "volunteers" for another hour before being eased out by deft police manoeuvring.

By I pm, the plain-clothes brigades had been replaced by uniformed police and the square was empty except for a small group of women cleaners, sweeping the cobbles vainly with small brooms, a dozen water trucks to hose bullying that had cost their sons' lives. They were escorted firmly from the

It had been a Moscow May Day demonstration like no other. Everybody who was anybody in the informal movements was there: from the Democratic Platform (the recently anothematized reform wing of the Communist Party), through the Liberals and the Democrats and the Social Democrats, to the late Dr Andrei Sakharov's Memorial Group and the anarcho-syndicalists with their distinctive red and black banners.

The Lithuanians and their backers were also out in force, with the red, yellow and green flags of "Free Lithuania" and their anti-blockade placards: "Gorbachov, Let Lithuania Go", "Long Live Free Lithuania", "Stop Strangling

Throughout, the joyful disorder of the crowd had been punctuated by the

the demonstrators had been all but drowned for the official guests by the blaring "background" music, part-martial, part-pop and part-uplifting exhortations to better work. The old was giving way to the new, but not quite yet.

When the country's top leaders turned and left, there was a feeling that they had, perhaps for the first time, met the whole multiplicity of their people face to face and had not liked what they saw.

May Day 1990 was different from previous May Days not only in its denouement. The international celebration of labour had been given a "kinder, gentler look". The prevailing colour was not red: pale blues dominated the giant billboards of Marx, Engels and Levin in Red Square. Public buildings and bus stops were adorned with pastel flower motifs and multi-coloured flags hung from the bridges.

ian city. The vast squares were empty of civilians, occupied by army lorries.

Falsely cheerful music screamed from invisible loudspeakers. Police. Interior Ministry troops and regulars patrolled the pavements, and the thugs who form the KGB's reserve guard - dully-dressed youths with bulging muscles and poor complexions - thronged each entry point to Red Square.

At 9.55, groups of trade union-sponsored demonstrators advanced from their mustering points around the inner ring-road behind their red banners to converge and enter the square as a symbolic wave of working class solidar-ity. The Polithuro group, which included leaders of official trade unions and the new leaders of Moscow City Council, walked on to the mausoleum to greet the crowd as the Kremlin clock struck 10.

A weak cheer went up, the hurrahs of But the effect was spoilt on May Day former years were not even invited, and

"We want perestroika, but not at any cost", their officially printed banners said. "Give us real wages for real work,"

The perfunctory trade union gathering was over within 40 minutes - a sad comment on the state of labour internationalism in its erstwhile home. Slowly, the 50,000 or so demonstrators filed out of the main square, and the informal groups stood where they had demonstrated less than an hour before, the flags of Free Lithuania at their head, waiting for the square to be theirs. ALBANIA'S leader, Mr Ramiz Alia, reformists and diehard Albanian communists seem close to a showdown, with reports of fresh unrest reaching here from several towns. The political battle has now been moved to the streets, with Mr Alia's supporters clearly relying on popular support to help push through change.

SEVERAL hundred Poles shouting "Get the Jew baiters", some of them waving black anarchist banners, charged and besieged an auti-socialist congress convened yesterday by seven extreme nationalist parties. A phalanx of skinheads, engaged by the nationalists, flung percussion grenades and then retreated to a courtyard inside the towering Stalinist Palace of Culture where the congress was being held. The congress, organized by Mr

Janusz Korwin-Mikke of the Union for Realpolitik, was intended as a spub to communists and socialists who have traditionally celebrated May Day as a worker's holiday. The seven parties are on the extreme right and share a belief in the free market. nationalist traditions and strict Catholic values. Semitic forgery, Protocols of Zion, and piles of pamphlets outlining a conspiracy between Jews and communists. With local council elections due later this month, and parliamentary elections next spring, the extreme right is trying to work out a common platform with the centreright. So far they have only common enemies.

There was certainly fierce criticism yesterday of important figures in the Solidarity leadership. Mr Jacek Kwiecinski, a 47-year-old journalist from the Liberal-Democracy (Independence) Party, lashed into Mr Adam Michnik, the Solidarity dissident, who is on the Liberal left. "They say that right-wingers are intolerant. But is Michnik a personification of tolerance and love? Yes, he is - but only towards communists."

The left-wingers in Solidarity, argued Mr Kwiecinski, needed to keep communism alive so that they could portray themselves as being in the centre of the political spectrum.

In the corridors, the skinheads recruited for the occasion were impatient for action. A first whilf came at the beginning of the congress when barely 100 radicals taunted the queue of delegates, a blend of the old who remembered the pre-war nationalist parties, and a dandified young in short hair and bow ties. "May Day is our holiday," jeered the protesters, until they were shooed away by the skinheads. A crowd of about 5,000, many of them veterans, survivors of the past 45 years of ideological battles and retreats, gathered. The first idea was to march to the Citadel, where 19th-century Polish socialists were executed by tsarist firing squads. But this was a threemile march, too far for the reformed communists, so they settled for a shuffling funereal cortege through the centre of Warsaw. Exhausted, they listened to Mr Leszek Miller, the 42year-old party general secretary, as he declared: "They can take away our money, our property, our jobs - but not our dignity, nor our willingness to serve our country."

"Have courage comrades," shouted a lone voice from the already thinning crowd. A band struck up the Internationale, so everybody left to buy ice

Loyalist Russians rally in Latvia

From Anatol Lieven Riga

AS LATVIA prepares for a declaration of independence by its supreme soviet tomorrow, several thousand mainly non-Latvian residents of the republic met at a May Day rally yesterday to oppose the

The crowd, mainly Russians, marched under red banners to the embankment of the River Daugava, led by Soviet military bands. They carried placards reading "No to the Lithuanian variant", and "Equal rights for us too". Speakers at the rally seemed to have been deliberately chosen from the small remaining number of ethnic Latvian opponents of independence, but also included several Russian leaders of the Soviet loyalist Interfront movement.

The speeches denounced the powers that want to restore the social order of the 1920s", and declared that "Latvia can only survive as part of the Soviet Union". The people in the crowd were mainly working class, and showed a measure of class hostility to the "bourgeois intellectuals" in the Latvian Popular Front. There was also, however, a fair sprinkling of the non-Latvian middle classes, which is worrying for the Popular their support for independence. A member of the Interfront board, Mr Anatoli Belaichuk, the head of Aeroflot in Riga, said that rapid economic separation from the Soviet Union would lead to "unemployment, strikes and conflict". One of the things that is worrying non-Latvians, most of whom migrated to Latvia under Soviet rule, is the Latvian Citizens' Congress, a body organized by the radical nationalist National Independence Movement. Only citizens of the inter-war Latvian republic and their descendants are eligible to vote for this body, and about half of them have done so. However, those 28,000 non-Latvians who have applied for citizenship in an independent Latvia were permitted to elect delegates without voting rights.

The congress has followed its equivalent in Estopia in claiming to be "the first legally elected body under Soviet occupation", denouncing the supreme soviet as "a part of the occupation system". While meeting on Monday and yesterday, however, it passed a resolution suggesting co-operation with the supreme soviet to achieve independence.

The congress elected a standing committee, including the Lutheran Archbishop Karlis Gailitis, of Riga. It also called for the banning of the Soviet Communist Party in Latvia. Many of its leaders described the non-Latvian population as "illegal immigrants" and "colonists", at a time when many Popular Front moderates regard winning over the non-Latvian population as a priority.

However, the congress draws prestige because, unlike most of the leaders of the Popular Front in all three republics, some of its deputies spent long periods in Soviet prisons as a punishment for their beliefs.

■ KIEV — Nationalist groups used May Day celebrations throughout the Ukrainian republic yesterday to call for independence.

In Lvov, a pro-democracy stronghold, the city's mayor led a reported 40,000 in a neonationalist rally. In Kiev, the republic's capital, the official parade was much smaller than in recent years and in Harkov. the Ukraine's second biggest city, Rukh activists took over the main body of the parade. -

They carried independence flags and shouted "Long live the Communist Party in Chemobyl" and "Freedom for Lithuania". In Odessa a pro-Rukh parade to coincide with the official celebrations was broken up by police.

The report, Patterns of Giobal Terrorism: 1989, attributed the "major decrease" in terrorism to infighting within the Abu Nidal organization, the renunciation of violence by Mr Yassir Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization, the end of the Afghan Government's terrorist campaign in Pakistan, the reluctance of states such as Libya and Syria to be found sponsoring terrorists, and improved counter-terrorist measures.

Criticism of Syria, which is seeking improved relations with the US, was muted, but the report accused it of providing sanctuary for a wide variety of international terrorist groups including the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, the organization ac-cused of the bombing of a Pan Am airliner over Lockerbie.

US concern had been repeatedly expressed to Syria, which had made some effort to improve its record. "To date the US Government is not satisfied with the Syrian Government's responses," the report said.

International terrorist incidents in the UK rose to 10 from four in 1988, with attacks on bookshops selling The Satanic Verses accounting for the increase.

Twenty-three Iranians were arrested and deported during the year, and one blew himself up while priming a bomb. British interests were also attacked in Pakistan, Turkey, Egypt, Peru, West Germany, Iraq and Lebanon.

By midday yesterday, 130 of the settlers who moved into the hostel just before Easter had discreetly melted away.

But 20 remained behind, as authorized by last week's Supreme Court decision, as agents of the Panama-based company which claims to have bought the lease on the hostel, known as St John's Hospice. The hostel is owned by the Greek Orthodox Church. "We just came to see I those who should have left have done so," one priest said, clearly distraught. Ulsan, South Korea MOST factories in Ulsan, the power base of South Korea's biggest exporter, Hyundai, were paralysed yesterday as workers joined strikes to protest over a police raid on Hyundai's shipyard.

Outside the south-eastern city, however, no large-scale strikes were reported in spite of earlier fears of nationwide walkouts on May Day. Witnesses said workers were blocked by a huge police force that thwarted plans for rallies in the key Masan-Changwon industrial area of the city. Two thousand workers clashed with riot police, they said.

Hyundai Motor Company's 22,000 workers marched peacefully through Ulsan after voting to strike for two more days until next Monday. Wednesday and Saturday are national holidays in South Korea. Seventeen thousand students clashed with riot police firing tear gas in Seoul and other cities in anti-gov-

or Officially Mr Quayle is Kennedy scion fails

bar exam From Charles Bremner New York

BANNER headlines on all three tabloids here yesterday were unanimous: The Hunk Flunks". For the Big Apple, there was no problem decoding the message — it referred to Mr John F. Kennedy Jr. the only citizen who is as famous for failing exams as he is for his good looks.

Declared by a recent magazine to be "the sexiest man alive", the son of the late President had for the second time failed to gain admission to the New York bar. He will be given one more chance before losing his job as an assistant district attorney in Manhattan. "I'm clearly not a major legal genius," Mr Kennedy, aged 29, said, promising to take the examination again and again "until I'm 95".

The crown prince of the Kennedy dynasty was upstaged by the offspring of another famous family. Miss Madeline Cuomo, daughter of Mr Mario Cuomo, New York's Governor, cruised through the bar examination at her first try. Mr Kennedy's sister, Caroline, passed a couple of years ago. New York's most eligible bachelor can, however, take comfort from illustrious precedent: his late Uncle Robert, also a former Manhattan district attorney, failed the test on his first try - which did not stop him going on to become a senator and United States

Attorney General. Mr Kennedy received acres of advice from the local media yesterday, including 10 tips from the New York Post.
Number one was "Ditch the whole thing, go to the beach and let delicious babes chase you for the rest of your life."

THE office of the Vice-President is very much grander than that of his boss. There is of the birth of Eisenhower, the President but, although there have been strong hints from the State Department that he "Vice-President Dan Quayle himself, however, as all the world now knows, is not very firmly dismissed the idea that his visit was pure ceremony. It was, he said, a serious part of the allied discussions on the future of Nato. He has a very engaging confidence. His record may be slight - too slight as yet to bear either the exaggerated criticism or the raves from his journalistic fan club - but Mrs Thatcher will find him an shares her caution about changing institutions. tience is a virtue," he told us, "and being cautious is part of doing the right thing.

The contribution of Nato is unparalleled in history. We must accommodate changes but there are some things we don't want to change - and peace and deterrence are two Mr Quayle is also very well briefed. He has had the confidence to assemble around him a team which can compensate to a considerable extent for any academic deficiencies.

According to Time, he spent 25 years "blissfully Awol from history". The magazine quotes one of his teachers as saying: "I looked into those blue eyes and I might as well have been looking out of the window.

Now, however, he has the support of conservative heavyweights on his staff who are at least a match for their equivalents in the empire of Mr James Baker, the Secretary of State. The rivalry between the two camps is still palpable in Washington, despite attempts to paper over the cracks. The Quayle position on Israel is less outspokenly critical than that of Mr Baker and, on the Soviet Union, he is closer to the scepticism of the Pentagon.

There are recurring stories of Mr Baker's desire to keep open the top space on the Republican ticket in 1996 for himself - an ambition which, if it is to be fulfilled, needs the Quayle image to remain, like his golden office picture frames, somewhat tarnished by their past. Relations between Mrs Thatcher and Mr Baker are now better than they were a year ago, but when the Prime Minister and the Vice-President review US foreign policy this weekend, they may find themselves much enjoying their special conservative slice of the special relationship.

Mr Quayle: "Awol from history" for 25 years

A LOT OF PEOPLE KNOW OUR AIRPLANES INSIDE AND OUT.

Namely our mechanics. Because at Pan Am every air-PLANE UNDERGOES FREQUENT PREVENTIVE MAINTENANCE. NO OTHER U.S. CARRIER SPENDS AS MUCH ON MAINTENANCE PER AIRCRAFT OPERATING HOUR AS PAN AM. IN FACT, MORE THAN $350 million is allocated for 1990 alone. It's no wonder OVER 30 OF THE WORLD'S AIRLINES TRUST THEIR MAINTENANCE TO US. ALL GOOD REASONS TO FEEL CONFIDENT THAT WHEN YOU CHOOSE PAN AM, YOU'VE MADE THE RIGHT CHOICE.

WE'RE FLYING BETTER THAN EVER

From gesture to realism

ast your mind back just three years, to early 1987. The campaign against the loony left in Labour councils. spearheaded by Norman Tebbit, then chairman of the Conservative Party, was in full swing. The tabloid press was replete with stories of the lurid actions of London Labour councils. Remember the alleged banning of black bin-liners and outlawing of "Baa baa black sheep" on the grounds of racism? The damage to Labour was enormous.

How the mood has changed, even in an area which until so recently was one of Labour's greatest vulnerabilities. There has been only a mild attempt to revive the old chestnut in the campaign for tomorrow's local elections, and it has completely failed. No doubt the main reason is the transformed political mood, but another is that Labour local councils have travelled a long way since the nightmare days leading up to the last general election.

For much of the 1980s, a new kind of leftism prevailed in many Labour councils. Its followers regarded local government as the front line in the fight against Thatcherism. They engaged in a new brand of gesture politics which saw flags flying above town halls and high-profile stances on racism and sexism. But they also came up with some sharp ideas, notably the GLC's cheap fares

However, well before 1987 the show was in trouble. Gesture politics was on the run. Serious splits began to occur, and the campaigns against rate-capping and in defence of services failed to gain public support. The turning Labour's defeat, much of the new politics rested on the idea of a better tomorrow, the Micawberlike belief that something would turn up. Many Labour councils mortgaged themselves to the hilt in expectation of a Labour victory, and when it did not materialize, they found themselves in a horrendous financial situation

Almost overnight, a new mood began to grip. The politics of mañana gave way to the art of survival. Ideology was rapidly junked in the name of pragmatism. The most startling change concerned the private sector. No longer the demon of old, it has come to be seen by many Labour councils as a crucial partner in local regeneration. Such prestige projects as the Olympics in Manchester, the World Student Games in Sheffield and the convention centre in Birmingham spring to mind, but there are hosts of less well-known examples.

The catalyst for this unlikely affair was necessity: spurned by central government and at their councils needed someone to turn to. But necessity has opened eyes that were previously closed, and many now see a virtue in the new local consensus.

A parallel example is the new interest in Europe. Not only have Labour councils discovered where Brussels is: some have become experts in its financial possibilities. More than one-third of ities. More than one-third of Birmingham's new convention centre, for example, is being funded by the Community. And like the partnership with the private sector, the EC has the advantage of providing Labour councils with a source of power independent of Mrs Thatcher.

There is also a new emphasis

There is also a new emphasis among Labour councils on the importance of delivering good services. Complacency and habit have given way, at least partially, to a growing sense that councils have to meet certain standards. There is now a preoccupation with efficiency and good management Ironically, this has been en-couraged by the introduction of compulsory competitive tender-ing, which has obliged local authorities to ask questions which previously barely occurred to them, such as the function of a particular service or its efficiency.

Meanwhile, the politics which was emblematic of the previous ers has been pushed to the margins. Non-cooperation by Labour councils has wilted. When it came to the poll tax, only Lambeth and Liverpool declined to fix a level, and they soon beat a hasty retreat. The crasser forms of gesture politics are now barely visible, and even equal opportu-nities and police committees have slipped down the agenda.

Kinnockism has triumphed. The new strategy is about pras-matism and realism. Ideology is out. The new message is that councils should work with everybody and anybody to deliver the goods. That's one theme. The other is the fight for survival. Local government is very hard up, and soon will be more so. Permanent staff are deeply demoralized. In London in particular, there is a serious shortage of candidates for council elections. Like teaching, local government is no place to be in 1990.

The casualty in all this is radical new thinking. It is difficult to innovate in a climate of cuts. And the new realism places a higher premium on sobriety than on imagination. None the less, there are new ideas at the margins. There is a growing belief that the old model of local government as administration is no longer appropriate. There is talk of an enabling model, in which what matters is not that the local authority itself should provide the service, but that it should be available and of good quality. Such thinking will need a lot more exposure if local government is to find a solution not only to Thatcherism but to its own crisis of credibility.

Martin Jacques will be writing a weekly column on this page.

Despite the thaw, Michael Evans sees a continuing need for an airborne early-warning system

Old warhorse still pulling its weight

early-warning aircraft, and the death of its 10-man crew, seems like an accident in a time warp. One of the RAF's oldest planes, it has an airframe that conjures up images of the Second World War and an obsolete radar system which is incapable of differentiating accurately between a civilian plane and a hostile low-flying jet-fighter.

Yet for as long as I can remember, this RAF stalwart has fulfilled a valuable role in Britain's air defence system, providing airborne early warning of poten-tially hostile intrusions into British air space. It is a role which from March 1991 will be progressively taken over by the US Awacs which the Government decided to buy for the RAF after scrapping the British Nimrod early-warning aircraft programme in December

But when the Government finally decides how to reshape Britain's armed forces, following its "options for change" review, will there still be a requirement to buy seven Awacs to protect our air space from low-flying Soviet fighters and wave-hopping cruise mis-siles, now that the threat appears to have receded?

Whatever changes are made in force levels in response to the political developments in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, the defence of the United Kingdom's air space will remain a fundamental responsibility of the Government. Furthermore, some capabilities must be protected from cuts in the future, including early-warning systems, intelligence-gathering and reconnaissance. These areas will become increasingly important, for they will provide Britain and the Nato alliance with vital information about any changes in Soviet military intentions over the next few years. The Awacs will need to be seen in this context.

Comparisons between the radar operated by an E-3 Sentry Awac and the Shackleton show clearly why the RAF has been anxious for a number of years to resolve the airborne early-warning issue. The Shackleton, using a first-genera-tion radar taken from the old naval Gannets, normally flies up to 200 miles out to sea. The radar has a range of about 100 miles. So if a hostile lighter approached the British coastline at 600 mph, air defence Phantoms would have 30 minutes to mount a counter-

The Government's choice of the American Awac instead of the British Aerospace/GEC Avionics Nimrod AEW was based on technical reasons. The E-3 Sentry meets or exceeds RAF requirements in all significant areas, and is a major advance beyond the Shackleton in terms of technology. It has an effective radar range of about 250 nautical miles and can track 400 targets simultaneously. Nimrod never looked as if it would meet these requirements. Of 20 flights carried out with Nimrod during the Ministry of Defence's evaluation of the sys-tem, only three were viewed as providing suitable data which began in 1977, cost more than £900 million, and it was thought that a further £600 million was needed to finish the project. The original contract, signed in March 1977, called for Numrod AEWs to be available for RAF training in May 1982 and for operational service in April 1984. Shackletons continued flying as the AEW issue became a considerable political embarrassment.

But why an airborne system when there are increasingly sophisticated ground-based ver-sions? First, because ground radar stations would be prime targets at the start of a war, and second, because airborne systems provide much longer-range surveillance than most land-based radars and have the ability to pick up lowflying aircraft and cruise missiles. The exception is the new American over-the-horizon "backscatter" early-warning radar, the first of which, situated in Maine. on the eastern seaboard of the United States, is due to be formally handed over to the US The long chain of radar antennae which bounce signals off the ionosphere have been designed to detect and track aircraft and cruise missiles flying at any altitude up to 2,000 miles away. The computers are so advanced that they can distinguish genuine targets from all the clutter the signals pick up.

But the over-the-horizon system has taken 20 years to develop and is still not in service. Also, it cannot pick up anything within a range of about 500 miles, because that is the first "skip" distance of the radar signal.

The over-the-horizon system has been developed to detect targets over the sea, whereas Awacs, operating from about 30,000ft, were built primarily to detect targets over land. To satisfy Britain's domestic and Nato commitments, the UK Awacs have been adapted by Boeing for a maritime role. It is clear that an advanced airborne early-warning capability will be required for as iong as there is the remotest possibility of a threat to this

Sitting down together but such a distance apart

R.W.Johnson considers the extreme pressure on both sides as the ANC

and Pretoria start talking about talks

ay 2, 1990, is a date which future genera-tions of South African schoolchildren will learn by heart - the day the ANC finally achieved the talks with the South African government which it had been demanding for the previous 70 years.

They will also study with in-terest the careful arithmetic of the ANC delegation: seven blacks, two whites, one Indian and one coloured. There is a balance of the movement's diplomatic and mili-tary wings and also of the older generation of Nelson Mandela and Walter Sisulu with the rising young stars like Thabo Mbeki. Two members are women.

There are some striking omissions. No room has been found for the most famous of South Africa's troublesome priests, Messrs Tutu, Boesak and Chikane. The United Democratic Front, which led the internal anti-apartheid struggle throughout the 1980s, has minimal representation and, most striking of all, no room has been found for representatives of the Cosatu trade union federation, which has provided the muscle and backbone of black politics.

This may simply mean that the ANC will demand separate representation for Cosatu when full negotiations begin, thus giving itself virtually a second delegation.
Others will see in this a sign that the ANC will seek to relegate the unions to a more subordinate position, as Swapo has quickly done in Namibia. It may, however, perhaps be too early to reach such a conclusion - these are just talks about talks, after all.

What the ANC would like out of the talks is a complete government amnesty for all anti-apartheid exiles, guerrillas of Umkhonto we Sizwe, its military wing, and political prisoners. De Klerk has already signalled his willingness to tackle this issue but he will hardly give way quickly. Some of those imprisoned, he will argue, have committed acts so violent of criminal that they cannot be pardoned without undermining the law. But he will have a more general reservation. His recent declaration that the government would not concede majority rule should be read as meaning. "I have made concession after concession and received nothing in return. The white right-wing par-ties are getting uncomfortably strong - polls suggest they might win if a white election were held now - and I simply cannot afford to make any further concession unless I receive something in return to brandish at the white electorate to show that negotiation is not just another word for a gradual slither to surrender." In particular, de Klerk will argue that a minimal condition for allowing Umkhonto guerrillas to return is for the ANC formally to abandon its commitment to armed struggle. The ANC will, in turn, find this hard to concede. Thousands of Umkhonto members are sitting in camps in Tanzania still receiving a political education based on the thoughts of Mao. Such men have suffered greatly, live in conditions accuse the ANC's political leadership of showing insufficient militancy or even of betraying them. To the ears of such men, abandoning the armed struggle could sound dangerously like saying that their sacrifices have been largely in vain and that there is no future

The ANC cannot risk such an outcome; nor can it afford the prospect of such men being dumped on the tail of the vast black unemployment queue back in South Africa. At the very least they have to come back to jobs perhaps within the South African Defence Force. But the image of ex-Umkhonto Private Bhengu, as it were, being whipped into shape by a Sergeant Van der Merwe is not much more credible than the notion of Colonel Bhengu taking command over Sgt Van der Merwe. On top of that, the Umkhonto leader, Joe Modise, who is part of the ANC delegation today, is the man accused by Umkhonto dissidents of being responsible for torturing them.

are prone to claim that "the only thing to negotiate is the seizure of power", who insist, in other words, that negotiations must be exactly the slither to white surren-der that the white right-wing parties so greatly fear. Similar difficulties attend the

and complex for there to be any realistic hope that agreement on them will come out of this initial three-day meeting. All else apart, the ANC can hardly be seen to call off the armed struggle so quickly and easily without risking accusa-tions from the Pan-Africanist

Congress of a self-out. Such accusations would have a certain resonance for many township, youth and Cosatu militants who

ANC demand for the lifting of the state of emergency and the removal of troops from the townships. De Klerk is bound to point out that since he lifted the ban on black political activity on February 2, more than 300 blacks have been killed in various forms of civil unrest, of whom fewer than 5 per cent have died as a result of white-on-black violence. De Klerk may well be ready to lift the state of emergency in much of the country but he is bound to cite the situation in Natal as a special case requiring a continuing and strong military presence to avoid further bloodshed.

The ANC's problem is that it has made a military withdrawal a major symbolic demand — one which plays well enough to audiences in Soweto but which has scant appeal in Natal where all observers concur that black opinion is strongly in favour of the troops remaining. Here too, it is difficult to see substantial progress being achieved very quickly.

The danger is that the talks could break down before they really start. The ANC is bound to declare that it is impossible for it to envisage proper negotiations while any of its followers are still languishing in jail, and de Klerk is bound to argue that it is equally impossible to negotiate with an organization which is still committed to an armed struggle. But both Mandela and de Klerk are clearly committed to the negotiation process — and the ANC, having got a bad press for having called off the talks once aiready, is likely to get most of the blame if they falter now.

The most important point to achieve is, indeed, merely that the talks should go on - perhaps with the formation of a joint government-ANC committee to consider procedures and an agenda. Even this will run into considerable ANC resistance, however: the ANC is bound to worry how the ing with the government within some semi-permanent structure is likely to be viewed by radical youths in the townships.

One way out of this is to throw a blanket of secrecy around the talks and the decisions taken. But there have been plenty of secret discussions aiready and the whole point of today's talks is precisely that they are being conducted before the gaze of the world, and a great weight of expectation lies on all the participants. The talks will be particulary difficult for the ANC, which has in effect no alternative strategy - realistically there can be no return to the armed struggle now. ANC leaders have long argued that the government would have no alternative but to hold such talks with them in the end. True enough. But now both sides are bound to the other, knowing that if these talks fail there will, unavoidably, just have to be more talks in the future.

CRAIG BROWN

he publisher of GQ magazine was disappointed recently to discover that his readers were liars. Asked in a survey to state which parts of the magazine they read, few admitted to liking fashion features. Undercover investigations revealed the truth to be rather different. In fact they liked fashion features best of all but, being men, were not prepared to admit it to a stranger.

Over the past few years, newspapers and magazines have become increasingly reliant on readership surveys. At the moment, jokes and restaurant reviews, my own specialities, are enjoying something of a boom, but with the green revolution well under way, something tells me that it won't be long before people will be too embarrassed to admit to such frivolities, and I will be forced to change my act to incorporate consumer tests of different rainforest-free mueslis specially written for the new joke-free zones in our national press.

If readers were utterly honest to these surveyors, the print industry would go haywire. My own observations suggest that on trains and buses, up to 98 per cent prefer to read the newspaper bought by the person next to them, even if it is the very same newspaper that they have already bought.

Often, one can spot two strangers, each with his eyes surreptitiously fixed on the other's open pages. One of them then makes a sudden shuffling movement or a cough, and immediately both sets of eyes swing back to their own paper. Ten seconds later, slowly but surely, both sets of eyes drift ideways once again. Sports bages, business news, news rom Canada - all sections 1 eraditionally shun - take on a curious fascination if observed pver someone else's shoulder at - suitably wonky angle.

c I have never known a readerhhip survey to unearth such a flaring truth, however, and, ven if it had, it would be hard h know how the newspapers hould respond. An advertising Campaign urging people to buy Sie newspaper best suited to the iferson in the seat next to them trould, I suspect, be doomed. 21 Surveyors should know that I devote much of my newspaper reading time to scanning the areas untouched by journalists. I start at Forthcoming Marriages, wondering at the suitability of each attachment and generally concluding on the strength of names, addresses and parentage, that the man sounds as rum as can be and that the poor woman should call it off as fast as she can.

From there, my eyes trip to Appointments, and I spend a great deal of time wondering whether I might possibly be better off becoming Chief Sales Executive for a Major Pharmaceuticals Firm opening up a new office in the Middle East. Then I am beset by worries about whether the climate would suit me, whether I could manage without alcohol, whether I know anything whatsoever about pharmaceuticals, and so on, usually deciding with no little regret that I am probably better off staying put. Much of my reading takes place without a printed page in sight. Who can resist the lure of the small-print Conditions for Entry for the competition on the back of the cereal packet? Who has not scanned a street of shiny doorplates? (I can recommend any back street in Vienna for a particularly long and gripping read.) The most casual of glances at art galleries reveals far more people reading the titles of paintings than looking at the paintings themselves. Ribald slogans on T-shirts; names and positions occupied on the lapels of executives as they wander purposefully in the foyers of hotels; the chillingly severe warnings against subletting to be found in the opening seconds of hired videos; signposts on roads announcing twin towns and encouraging safe drivers: flashing neon weather reports and apologies for inconvenience at major railway stations; grafitti chalked into the dust of passing lorries: the world is there to be read, and most of it was not written by writers. I only wish that aeroplane skywriting was as popular in real life as it used to be in children's comics. To read a newspaper in the sky, preferably over someone's shoulder.

No escape, not even in Wales

ith the poll tax the hottest issue of the day, it is hardly surprising that David Hunt is increasingly anxious to abandon his job as minister for local government and take up his new post — to which Mrs Thatcher appointed him in her last reshuffle - as Secretary of State for Wales. But with Peter Walker still showing no sign of budging, and the Prime Minister not expected to announce a date for the handover until after tomorrow's local elections, Hunt has not even been able to start clearing his desk at the Environment Department. To add to his tribulations, he returned from a trip up the Thames yesterday with Lady Porter, leader of Westminster City Council, to find that his car had been wheel-clamped. But he had one piece of good fortune. Sixty student nurses planning to lobby him over the poll tax got their ministries in a twist instead of gathering outside the DoE, it was the Department of Trade and Industry (prop. Nicholas Ridley) that bore the brunt of their fury. Even when he does move to his new job, Hunt will still be dogged by the poll tax. "It's a burning issue in Wales," says one White-hall source. "It will take up an enormous amount of time, and he knows it. He can escape only by going to Northern Ireland, which still has rates." Even the poll tax might be preferable to that.

And who might pick up the poll-

• Following Labour's plans to recruit expatriate voters, the Gorernment has now revealed that it is spending £760,000 on advertising the rights of overseas voters. Nearly £11,000 is being spent in South Africa and £23,000 in Spain, two areas where the Tories hope to pick up votes. Eire, which Labour describes as its "secret weapon". has been allocated a publicity budget of £100. And who on earth stands to gain most from the £50 advertising campaign in Tristan

Premonitions of old Tith speculation growing about Mrs Thatcher's future, the Diary confidently predicts that May 10 is the day on which the nation's sandwich boards will proclaim: "Britain has new Prime Minister". Further confirmation will be found on London's underground, where posters will scream: "Germans drive Prime Minister from Downing Street". But Mrs Thatcher is not about to resign over German unity and the changing face of Europe. A third headline, "Churchill was a mole" - a suggestion even more controversial than Clive Ponting's recent claims - gives a clue to the news. May 10 is the 50th anniversary of Winston Churchill's accession to the premiership in 1940, and the advertising agency CPS is at-tempting to whip up trade for one of Whitehall's premier tourist attractions, the underground

roviding that a talking green parrot can be found in time, the Swallows and Amazons Society will be launched in June, 60 years after the appearance of Arthur Ransome's children's classic. The ceremony will take place at the Windermere Steamboat Museum at Bowness; present will be the Amazon, the original boat from the stories, and Brigit Saunders, "the ship's baby" from the Altounian family on whom the Swallows were based. Strangely, Ransome's Utopian dream of waterborne childhood is particularly big in Japan. A four-figure contribution to the Amazon restoration fund has been received from the Japanese Ransome appreciation society, which is to send a delegation to the June launch. ### MAY DAY IN MOSCOW

"Christ is risen, Mikhail Sergeyevich!" An Orthodox priest, bearing a cardboard image of the Saviour, paused yesterday before Lenin's mausoleum to beseech the Soviet President and the entire Politburo with these memorable words. Behind him, demonstrators booed the rostrum in a gesture unthinkable just a year ago. Were they all sounding Mr Gorbachov's death knell? Many who watched May Day in Moscow yesterday must have sensed an era drawing to an unlamented end.

True, the loyal communists who were bused into Red Square in time-honoured fashion greatly outnumbered the assortment of Liberal Democrats, Constitutional Democrats, Social Democrats, anarcho-syndicalists and Christians who raised their banners in peaceful protest. To Western observers, the future has, throughout Eastern Europe, seemed to belong to this well-disciplined, brave and dedicated opposition. But in Russia so many things are different. The alternative is not necessarily a courteous handover of power to a new elite. Instead, there always looms the hideous violence and wanton impiety of the last scene of Boris Godunov, lifting the curtain on the dark forces for ever threatening to martyr Mother Russia when the hand of authority weakens.

Like Boris, Mikhail Gorbachov is a flawed, even a tragic hero. His rule has certainly been a blessing for most of his fellow Russians, though less so for the other Soviet peoples. His role in the liberation of central Europe last year alone is sufficient to guarantee him an honourable place in the history books.

But Mr Gorbachov also shares with Boris an inability to escape the stigma of his illegitimate claim to the throne. Mr Gorbachov's Bolshevik forerunners were usurpers. They murdered their predecessors, exterminated their rivals, and have held on to power ever since by methods which have far exceeded those of the tsars in arbitrary crueity and mendacious selfglorification. Mr Gorbachov may have curbed the systematic distortion of his party's record in office, but he may have unleashed forces which are already beyond his control.

Much that was once dogma has been carried away, but one rock still towers above the flood: Vladimir Ilyich Lenin. Debunking of this one Soviet communist patriarch is not tolerated even under Mr Gorbachov. Lenin is still "the greatest thinker of the twentieth century", his claim resting on the "sublime art" of foresight and pragmatic adaptation of Marxist theory to reality. Mr Gorbachov denies that Lenin saw himself as simply the founder of a theoretical system. He sees him, in essence, as an improviser of genius. He knew how to make things happen; his policies worked. This, Mr Gorbachov maintains, legitimizes perestroika (a practical, not a theoretical, notion) as an orthodox variant rather than a heresy.

And yet, "Down with the cult of Lenin" said one banner yesterday. The May Day protests suggest that Mr Gorbachov has failed to revive the soul of Soviet society with his minimalist version of what was once a visionary creed. If so, he must know it: why else maintain the greatest apparatus of surveillance in human history if not to receive accurate data about the popular protest? Mr Gorbachov does not live in the cloud-cuckoo land of the Ceausescus, who appear to have been genuinely astonished by their executioners' enthusiasm.

The Soviet Union itself emerged from what was a class war and proclaimed the ideal of communism as a classless society. Mr Gorbachov is clearly turning his back on much of this. "An intellectual of noble birth, Lenin was part of the people," he remarks. Lenin's upper-class background used to be played down, but is no longer a source of shame for Mr Gorbachov - himself a Cossack, once despised as the tsars' most obedient servants. He should accept Mr Vaclav Havel's alternative to the classless ideal, a "civil society".

Mr Gorbachov's Leninism remains imprecise, committed still to a Soviet supremacy over a restless empire, to a planned economy, to internal market pricing which barely deserves the name and which has delivered only shortages, racketeering, crime and misery. He stood on the rostrum yesterday, no longer the beacon of hope for the oppressed peoples of the East, but an increasingly tarnished dictator of one of Leninism's greatest bastions.

Yet May Day should rest with the priest. Mikhail Sergeyevich could at least defy Lenin's banishment of priests to Siberia. He should remove the remaining restrictions on the practice of Christianity and rehabilitate those Christians his creed so sorely oppressed.

LOVE MY DOG

When a new clause to the Environmental Protection Bill was debated in the Commons on Monday advocating a dog registration scheme, the Government imposed a three-line whip to ensure its defeat. The Conservatives no doubt wished to avoid an embarrassing reverse only days before tomorrow's local

It was, for all that, an inept decision. As the attack on a human was recorded. At Dudley, in the West Midlands, a four-year-old girl was set upon by an Alsatian and a Rottweiler. Injuries to her face required 200 stitches. These ever more numerous, and ever fiercer, animals are by far the most dangerous weapons which members of the public are permitted to keep without any sort of control.

Monday's debate could have taken place only in this country, and in a nation reared on tales of Greyfriars Bobby and Thomas Hardy's dog Wessex. Until a year or so ago, the argument would have been mainly about the plight of strays and the fouling of pavements, but the case for increased control has been strengthened by a spate of dog attacks resulting in injury and even death, many the result of a dramatic rise in the breeding of certain species.

Ten years ago, there were few Rottweilers in Britain; today there are an estimated 180,000 of them. Pit bull terriers are bred specifically for fighting. Earlier on the day that the clause was debated, a pit bull terrier attacked three people in their home at Portsmouth, and was driven off only after a neighbour had tried to prise its jaws open with a garden fork.

Dame Janet Fookes did not come to the Commons with a fully articulated scheme. She argued for acceptance of the principle that all dogs should be registered, that responsibility should rest with the local authority and that those who failed to register should be fined. The Government was not persuaded that her proposals would meet the "poliuter pays" principle which informed the rest of the Bill the real problem, they contended, was with irresponsible owners who would be the last to comply with registration.

The battle lines were curiously drawn, inside and outside Parliament. Dame Janet's clause had the support of the Police Federation, the National Farmers' Union, the British Veterinary Association and the RSPCA. The Government's main supporter in opposition to registration has been the Kennel Club, which endorsed the Department of the Environment's view that the scheme would be expensive and difficult to enforce.

Mr David Heathcoat-Amory, the hapless junior minister put up to stonewall on the Government's behalf, did what he could with a brief that allowed him to say that he was looking at the possibility of creating a specific offence of allowing a dog to stray. The Government's wish to make local authorities invoke the long-forgotten Control of Dogs Order of 1930 takes us into A. P. Herbert country, except that it is no longer a laughing maner.

The pressure exerted by the jaws of a Rottweiler is of the order of 400 lbs per square inch. They and other dangerous breeds are increasingly owned by people who, in the RSPCA's phrase, use them as unguided missiles. The Government has unwisely set its face against registration. After this week's horrifying incidents, there should be no further doubt. If there is to be no registration and related penalties, then dogs bred for offensive purposes should immediately be brought within the scope of the Dangerous Animals Act

THE HUMAN FACTOR

Nearly one in three pedestrians admit to crossing the road when the lights are against them; one in six fail to look first in each direction. A similar proportion of those who travel by rail open doors and clamber in or out when the train is moving. Nearly half of Britain's drivers speed on motorways.

In 1988, 29 people died falling from moving trains. Five were killed and 761 others injured on entering and alighting at stations. A further 406 were injured opening and closing carriage doors. Of all road deaths involving pedestrians in Britain, nearly half are caused by passengers not looking to right and left when leaving the relative safety of the pavement.

An initial reaction to this basket of statistics, from a survey quoted by the Department of Transport yesterday, is to wonder why they seem so low. Nobody visiting Waterloo Station in the rush hour could fail to observe train doors prematurely opening with the precision of a well-drilled corps de ballet as Londoners dive precariously to work. The commuters who dart like swallows across Whitehall ... those motorists in the fast lane on the M4...all leave the clear impression of a nation bent like lemmings on self-destruction.

One explanation is that this set of modest figures is based only on those who have confessed to their sins. Only 42 per cent of people questioned agreed, for example, that they "sometimes failed" to read safety cards on aircraft. Only 55 per cent admitted that they never checked the muster points on ferries. Such statistics suggest that far more do indeed offend. The Government is therefore moving in the right direction with its campaign "Safety on the Move", announced by the Transport Secretary, Mr Cecil Parkinson.

An awesome number of these accidents is avoidable. If the Transport Department can persuade more travellers to think the unthinkable it will make some progress towards its declared goal of reducing by one third the shocking number of road deaths (5,000 last year) before the end of this century. There will always be a limit, however, to the results that can be achieved by publicity and educational campaigns.

Britain's overall road accident record compares well with those of other Western European countries. But the numbers involving children are disturbing and have shown a recent (and so far unexplained) increase. These accounted for 13 per cent of all road casualties last year and 7 per cent of all deaths. This alone reinforces the argument for the Government to consider new legislative measures to back up its new publicity campaign.

These should include tighter speed limits on roads, including motorways, with possibly lower limits for motor-cyclists and more severe penalties for those who flout the law. The Government's pusillanimity on random breath tests - part of its general indulgence of alcohol abuse - continues to permit far too much drinking before driving. The wearing of belts in the rear seats of cars should long ago have been made compulsory for adults as well as for children.

There might also be legislation on jaywalking, in city centres if not throughout the country. One in three of all road accidents involve a pedestrian. By no means all of these most vulnerable travellers will heed the advice of a Government campaign. As traffic volumes rise, compulsion must have a part to play. Such measures might be unpopular. So what?

From the Editor of Ethics &

Medicine Sir. The extraordinary decision of the House of Commons to abandon the safeguards provided by the Infant Life (Preservation) Act and permit (some) abortion all the way to term (report, April 25) is profoundly disturbing, must sure-ly have been largely unintended, and cannot be allowed to stand. It represents a major liberalisation of our abortion law in a direction which has never even been debated in Parliament, and which takes us beyond the classic abortion dilemma of the ambiguity of pre-viable foctal life into the deliberate destruction of those who were already considered "capable of being born alive" as long ago as 1929 when the Act was framed. Many people who have no sympathy for the "pro-life" movement will find this deeply disturb-

For that very reason this entirely unexpected development takes us beyond the area in which it may reasonably be claimed that we are dealing with a matter of private conscience. It is incum-bent on the Government to face the public policy questions raised and, at the least, to find a way of testing parliamentary opinion on the central question; do our legislators truly intend the unborn to be destroyed well beyond viability, for any other cause than to save the life of the mother?

The answer may, of course, be "yes"; and - if so - we will have moved from discussion of abortion to that of cuthanasia. But unless it is "yes" there must be an opportunity, in the cold light of day, to draw back from so momentous a step in the medi-cine, law and ethics of our nation. Yours faithfully, NIGEL M. de S. World Service policy

From Professor Alan Thompson Sir, I cannot agree with your view (leading article, April 26) that the BBC World Service's policy of broadcasting to friends and focs alike "suffers from an amount of neo-imperialist waffle".

Government priorities tend to favour broadcasting to "enemies" and I would not deny the importance of this. We should not, however, overlook our friends including the Americans. Ameri-EC, and the needs of responding collectively to dramatic changes in Europe, are a vital part of the dialogue between allies.

Furthermore, in international affairs friends and enemies change backwards and forwards over time. The BBC should be speaking to both all the time. Yours faithfully ALAN THOMPSON. 11 Upper Gray Street, Edinburzh 9.

Sir, For over a year now, the Bar Council has been pressing, or threatening, charges of professional misconduct against a number of barristers (myself included) who have refused to nev a subscription on the grounds (among others) that the rule compelling payment constitutes an unnecessary restraint of trade. Now the Courts and Legal Services Bill proposes (clause 29) that the Bar's rules of conduct will be deemed to have statutory approval.

It will be strange if, as seeins possible, the proposed legislation has the effect of validating a restrictive practice or closed shop which might otherwise have been unlawful. I understood that Goveroment policy was quite dif-Yours faithfully,

Hereditary peers From Lady Platt of Writtle, FEng Sir, Lady Warnock proposes (article, April 20) that one of the advantages of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Bill might be that noble families could arrange to have a male baby to ensure inheritance. May I suggest an easier alternative solution to the inheritance of titles in that it should be possible for women to inherit if there are no sons. Life peers are of necessity older people, and we very much appreciate the contribution to the work of the House of Lords made by younger hereditary male peers. It would be a great advantage if we also had the benefit of younger female hereditary peers. Already we are fortunate in that a few Scottish pecrages are inherited through the female line. May that soon be widely possible in the rest

Poll tax issues

From Councillor Mrs Janet Todd Sir, While canvassing for the local elections I have been interested to see the residuum of favourable reaction to the principle of the community charge even from many who are not going to gain from the change. If the councils were charging less there would be, I believe, general acceptance of the principle of everyone paying towards local government services.

However, I am concerned by the widespread ignorance of the extent and even of the existence of rebates and transitional relief. The Labour majority on my council has decided to postpone the sending out of bills (for £489) and the full details of the rebates and relief will therefore be postponed as well.

These include the income levels up to which reductions can be obtained - in the case of Oxford £196 per week for a couple with two children under 11, £172 per week for a pensioner couple and £127 per week for a single parent with one child under 11.

Such figures will of course vary in accordance with the amount of community charge involved. They are not nugatory amounts, and they give the lie to statements that the community charge is a fixed charge and impossible for many to

Prison riots

From Colonel K. M. Stuckey Sir. Only one important ingredient was lacking in the Strangeways affair - political will. In January, 1964, I had the privilege of flying into Uganda with my regiment, the Staffords, to deal with a riot situation approaching insurrec-tion. Thanks to the political courage of the then Foreign Secretary, and determination at general officer level, we were given carte blanche.

An unopposed landing at Entebbe, an admirable High Commissioner and a decisive Defence Council combined to enable us to deliver by night a bloodless coup de main to a mutinous battalion with arms and ammunition enough to fight a sustained battle. Within a matter of hours, at the direction of Prime Minister Obote, the emasculated battalion was disbanded, having been handed over by the then commanding officer - by name Idi Amin.

From Professor Emeritus Kenneth Kirkwood Sir, Your editorial criticism ("Cul-ture and the classroom", April 24) of the "muddled prejudice" which often accompanies charges of "racism" is timely in the contemporary debates on educational and other policy. ### Neglect of royal churchyard

From Colonel P. H. Moir Sir. Whenever I have the opportunity, which is not often, I visit the Church of St Mildred, Whippingham, on the Isle of Wight to see my father's grave. He died in the convalescent home at Osborne House before the last war.

I paid a recent visit and once again I left upset and depressed. The churchyard is not well cared for and there is a general air of neglect. Near my father's grave, the grave of Uffa Fox, the celebrated yachtsman, has been vandalised.

I know the difficulties - lack of money, shortage of staff, etc. But this is Queen Victoria's own special church. Even the graves of Prince Louis of Battenberg and his wife - Prince Philip's grandparents and Prince Charles's greatgrandparents - have weeds encroaching on them. Subsequently, with a friend, I visited Osborne House and was impressed by the general air of efficiency. There are numerous, helpful staff and the gardens are beautifully maintained.

I could not help wondering whether just a small part of the effort so successfully devoted to Osborne House and its grounds could not be diverted to Whippingham churchyard. They are only a mile apart and both are a valuable part of our heritage. Yours sincerely, H. MOIR,

Common land

From Mr David Lindsay Sir, Alan Franks's article on common land (April 16) deals, of course, only with "correctly listed" commons, but I am sure he would be the first to agree, with the Common Land Forum, set up by the Countryside Commission, who called together a number of interested parties but nobody specifically representing the small property owner, that the omission (from the 1965 Act) of the omission from the 1965 Act of appropriate provisions for giving notice, which might be thought to be no more than a requirement of natural justice, has led to cases in which private houses and gardens ... have become finally registered as common land and that "provision must be made for such nonsense to be put right".

Tony Favell's private member's Act last year put right the "non-sense" only in relation to land under or ancillary to a dwelling house that had existed since August, 1945, leaving still to be corrected all other "misregistrations", as the Forum described light since the end of the two-year period for objecting, many relating to parcels of land of under one acre that some over-eager parish council had wrongly thought were "waste of the manor".

The forthcoming legislation should, therefore, provide that, where a landowner can prove that. in 1965, his land was neither waste of the manor nor subject to rights of common, such land shall be de-

OBITUARIES

Antoine Vitez, director of the Comédie Française, died on April 30 from a brain haemorthage, aged 59. He was born in Paris on December 20.

THE son of an Hungarian photographer and self-proclaimed anarchist and his Normandy wife, Antoine Vitez was considered to be one of the most intellectual actordirectors of his day. He, however, always denied the tag, claiming that he was was merely "a simple peasant."

Despite this rebuttal Vitez was an accomplished linguist. His mastery of Russian enabled him to translate Sholokov, Chekhov and Bulgakov. He also made a version of Sophocles' Electra.

It was his unforgettable production of this work in 1971 at the Amandiers-Nanterre that established him as a director of exceptional perception. A family man - his wife is the Belgian actress Agnes Van Molder, and his two daughters, Marie and Jeanne, are marionettists - he preferred that his life remained that way. He was also reluctant to talk about his hard "but honourable" childhood. Seen as a prude, he nevertheless raised no objection whenas Faust, he was required to appear nude on stage.

At one point he was secretary to the communist writer Louis Aragon and he joined the French Communist Party when he was 27. He remained a member until 1980 when he resigned in Poulain, protest at the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

During the 1960s and 1970s, Vitez travelled the length and breadth of Europe acting and directing with dif-ferent companies. He began to put down roots when, from 1972 until 1974, he was coartistic director under Jack Lang (currently French Minister of Culture) of the Theatre National de Chaillot. He returned as its artistic director in 1981 until in June, 1988, he was appointed to head the Vitez's austere Marxist tinted cerebrality concealed a frank humour, and he was a talented, if acerbic, impersonator. Self-effacingly he said he had no decorative taste. "What taste I have I save for the theatre.'

He claimed to be musically "ignorant", yet he was capable of directing with panache such operas as Le nozze di Figuro in Florence (1979), which marked one of Riccardo Muti's earliest excursions into Comedic Française, following Mozart on stage. Vitez's view hour production of Le Soulier de satin was premiered in the Avienon Festival's Cour d'Honneur in 1987. It was given a mixed reception by the critics and public, but in retrospect, can be seen to have made theatrical history. The following year, Vitez again stole the Avignon Festival limelight with his brilliant production of Lars Cleberg's Apprentice Sorcerers, which he directed as well as playing the role of Stanislavsky. This was an apt piece of self-casting, for Vitez was a pupil of Tania Balachova, who nurtured his natural tendency towards the Stanislavskian method. He was something of a guru and his love of teaching found an outlet as the Director of Studies of the Theatre of Nations University in 1965, as a teacher at the Jacques Lacoq Mime School (1966-70), and as a Professor of the Conservatoire National Supérieur d'Art Dramatique (1968-81).

The final production by Vitez opened only a month ago: Brecht's Galileo. This was only the second time Brecht had been seen at the Comedie Francaise and it was both a labour of love and a demonstration of Vitez's determination to extend the twentieth century repertoire.

In the coming weeks, Vitez was to have announced La Française's 1990-91 Season, the first by which his influence could truly be judged. Only the most intimate of his friends were aware of the sadness with which he left the Chaillot to take up the reins of La Française at a time when it was grumbling with internal born on June 16, 1910.

FRANCIS Bunbury, who had been to Rugby and Sandhurst where he was commissioned in 1930, was already a veteran infantry fighter, with a DSO under his belt for leading the lst King's Own Royal Regiment in the Italian Campaign, when hostilities broke out in Korea. His second DSO was won in command of the 1st Battalion The Duke of Wellington's Regiment, whose Stalwart performance under fire in Korea has earned it an Dukes' positions on the night indelible place in the history of the British Army since

During the Korean War The Hook won for itself a reputation as a graveyard which became almost as awesome as that of Hill 60 in the First World War or Monte Cassino in the Second. There were other hills in Korea over which fierce battles had been fought, and which inspired something like affection in the participants. Among them were Plum Pudding Hill, "home" of the 1st Middlesex; Hill 355 which the King's Own Scottish Borderers had stormed; the shapely "Betty Grable" in the American sector, and the provokingly curvaceous "Jane Russell".

But The Hook, a bleak horseshoe-shaped eminence which lay to the west of the Samichon River, dominated both the surrounding countryside and the minds of the combatants. Both sides wanted it, and fought over it with unexampled ferocity, reducing it to a morass of mud and putrefying flesh.
The 7th US Marines had stormed it and entrenched themselves, only to be blasted off again by Chinese shell-fire and napalm in October 1952, They had gone back, sup-ported by artillery and aircraft and retaken it, later handing it over to the 1st Black Watch, who had deepened the American trench system and were able to repel all Chinese attacks through a wise tactical policy of "defence in depth.".

When the Dukes, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Francis Bunbury, relieved them early in May 1953, it was in an atmosphere heavy with the threat of impending attack. Chinese loudspeakers around The Hook told the defenders that their previous attacks had merely been a "patrol action" and promised worked as a young reporter on morning dress walked to came upon some of Hudson's ferocious retribution to the hitherto undiscovered letters.

Like many of the British battalions, the Dukes were Glasgow Evening Times. lous attention to detail, he Ornithology of Buenos Aires, He joined Outram's took equal care for the welfare published by Cornell University Press. National Servicemen, but they had the additional disadvantage of having come to Korea from inactive garrison duty in Germany. Nevertheand NCOs worked wonders with them in training and by the time they took over The Hook they were at least inured to hardship from training and patrols, though naturally lack-

A Pierre Bunbury, CBE, DSO Chinese deserter who had and Bar, defender of The come into the Dukes' hands Hook in Korea, in 1953, died told Bunbury that an attack in aged 79 on April 28. He was strength, which outnumbered the British by five to one, was scheduled for May 20.

His information about the Chinese units to be involved was unusually detailed, and Bunbury was inclined to suspicion. But much else about the deserter was plausible and Bunbury eventually accepted his story. Putting his troops on the alert, he issued the directive to fight to the last man and the last round.

True to the deserter's assertions, a massive artillery bombardment opened on the of May 20, 4,500 shells falling before dawn on May 21. For the next seven days shells and mortar bombs killed men in their bunkers, wrecked trenches and shattered platoon command posts. It would have been an ordeal for the most battle-hardened troops, and Bunbury was at times fearfully worried. But his men held firm in spite of the steady stream of casualties which depleted their ranks.

On the evening of May 28 the bombardment lifted and what is known as the fourth Battle of The Hook began in earnest. It was a night of fierce hand to hand fighting which decided the possession of The Hook for the rest of the war. To some, the presence of the enemy in person was almost a relief from the impersonal horrors of shelling and mortaring. Men rose from the trenches where they had crouched, numbed, for the previous week, and there was a series of bloody encounters which ranged from grenade throwing range to a few feet. There was frightful carnage as sten gun magazines were emptied into packed phalanxes of attacking Chinese at point blank range in narrow communications tunnels. Grenades exploding in enclosed bunkers took fearful toll.

But by the morning of the 29th the attackers had had enough, and retreated, leaving swathes of dead numbering some hundreds littering the slopes and hanging from the barbed wire. These were gazed. at with awe by the soldiers of the 1st Royal Fusiliers who relieved the exhausted Dukes on The Hook It was a remarkable fest of arms achieved at the expense of only 24 dead.

The Korean war ended with the signing of an armistice in July 1953, but it was not the end of Bunbury's active service career. He was mentioned in dispatches for his performance as commander of 50 Independent Infantry Brigade in Cyprus between 1956 and 1959, and appointed CBE.

His final appointment was less Bunbury and his officers as Deputy Adjutant-General the Rhine Army, and he retired in 1962. His wife Pamela, whom he married in 1933, died in 1969. They had a son and a daughter.

WOLSELEY Garden Park near Rugeley, Staffordshire, the first major British garden to be created for the public this century, was opened yes terday by Mr Edmund de Rothschild, of Exbury Gardens, Southampton, Hampshire. He also opened the adiacent Cramphorn's garden centre which will sell many plants seen in the park.

The garden, which extends 40 acres beside the Trent in the grounds of the former Woseley Hall, was created by Sir Charles and Lady Wolseley over four years.

Among the nine theme gardens and four-acre lake is a large walled rose garden, displaying varieties from medieval times to the present day, water and bog gardens (which will eventually include the National Willow Collection). a scented garden, a woodland spring garden, a rock garden and a winter garden.  One of the great gardens of Victorian England, a unique creation that has survived years of neglect and vandalism, is being restored and will open to the public a year from now (John Young writes). Biddulph Grange, a few

ON THIS DAY MAY 2

Our Correspondent with the Fifth Army in Italy described his journey to Milan 36 hours ahead of the Allied forces. The city had already been liberated by the partisans. ITALIAN

PARTISANS' GOOD WORK FACTORIES SAVED FROM GERMANS From Our Special Correspond

MILAN, May 1 The journey from Mantua, where we left the Pifth Army behind was an extraordinary experience. We passed through fragments of the broken German Army who were too tired of the war to take much notice of two British war correspondents speeding along in a jeep. The only hindrance to our passage came from Italian partisans. It was necessary to approach every village roadblock with extreme caution, for behind it crouched anxious patriots with fingers on triggers of rifles, who were ready to blaze away at any enemy, but capered in ecstasies when they discovered the invader was an ally. Half-way to Cremona we were warned that there were three truckloads of armed Germans at the next cross-road. The report was correct. They were a scratch lot of infantry from various units under the command of a very nervous lieutenant who was just as conscious as his men that the war was finished for them. He was still keen to do his duty as a soldier, but not at all sure what that might be in the circumstances. We tried to persuade him to surrender to the local partisans. A kindly farmer invited them all to his house to celebrate the end of the war if only they would lay down their arms, but the lieutenant continued to boggie at the inevitable, and so we left him to settle with the partisans by himself.

Cremona was just rid of the Germans and could not quite believe it; and so the two allied representatives had to be paraded down the corso to show that the Fifth Army had really arrived. From Cremona onwards parties of Germans were met along the road, some mans were met along the road, some armed and some unarmed, but all quite innocuous. Driving along the road through the middle of droves of enemy soldiers was him a dream. Near Piadena the imposing Fascist headquarters was reported to be manned by 200 obdurate Fascist with machine-guns, but the 200 dishards resolved themselves, after cautious accommissance, into one tious reconnaissance, into one dignified but distressed communal secretary with half a dozen supporters who were anxious only that they should not be massucred by

RETREAT FROM PIACENZA Beyond Crema we bumped into the tail of a German armoured coloumn retreating from Piecenza in the hope of reaching the Brenner Pass by way of Brescia. They had just been bombed by a flight of Mustangs and were clearly surprised to find two British war correspondents in their midst, but apparently regarded it as an inevitable detail of their unfortunate lot. Near by, in the villages round Lodi, were quartered a whole division of Czechoslovaks who had deserted from the Germans and were waiting for allied troops to come along. So in the dusk we came to Milan and crowds swarmed into the

The Liberation of Milan by the combined efforts of its Committee of National Liberation and partisans represented the culminating effort of the resistance movement, which during the last year had been organized to a high degree of efficency. What happened in Milan happened also in Turin, Gence and nearly all the big cities of Lombardy and Piedmont. The result has been that the greater part of the industrial equipment of northern Italy, factories, foundaries, power stations, and hydroelectric plants, have been preserved intact in so far as they are undamaged by allied bombing.

o the cross-border two-step

John Ashford are together, they might be seen as a double act the loquacious one and the quiet one, but both with a rapport and enough shared knowledge to be able to answer questions meant for the other. In fact, their working circumstances and functions are different, but they have one vital ambition in common and ideas about how to develop that to mutual advantage and the benefit of others. Hill is the dance programmer for Glasgow's Mayfest, which opens its eighth season this week. It proudly proclaims itself one of the fastest-growing British festivals and is already the second largest international festival in Britain. (Disdainfully, the location of the biggest one, thought perhaps also to be in Scotland, is not mentioned by anyone connected with Mayfest.)

Its wide range of activities, lasting most of the month, takes in local activities and community events as well as an international programme. The dance programme is necessarily a selfcontained series amid all the other activity. It is essentially contemporary: the word "ballet" appears in its listings only once, with a special programme by the Scottish Ballet at Glasgow's new performing space, the Tramway, where it will give works by Italian and French choreographers and an American who works with William Forsythe in Frankfurt.

There is only one other local production, a performance by the Glasgow-based Gregory Nash Group, and one from England, Shobana Jeyasingh's Orientations. in collaboration with Michael Nyman's music. The rest of the presentations come from the US (five groups), France (three), Belgium (two), the Netherlands (two) and Germany (one).

That is an impressive international sweep, but it is also expensive, not only in transport costs, but because dancers and choreographers in Europe and America are used to higher fees than their underpaid British counterparts.

This is where the connection with John Ashford is made. He is director of The Place theatre in London, where he has done wonders organizing dance seasons on a shoestring budget. His latest venture is "The Turning World", a four-week season of small companies from around the world announced as the first of nine annual seasons.

Half of Ashford's presentations are coming only to London, and half of Hill's are booked only for Glasgow. The rest are shared, with obvious benefits both in keeping costs down and making the trip more attractive to performers and Ashford's still has the edge on Hill's, because of the possibility of notices in the London-based national newspapers. But other factors can play a part; Philippe Decousse is taking his company back to Glasgow with the world because he had such a good time there last year. The enthusiasm of Hill and Ashford for their artists is

Luckily they have similar tastes. Both insist that they will not choose anything they do not believe in, although Hill is circumscribed by the fact that the Third Eye Centre contributes its own selection of events to Mayfest.

The need to take account of what the audiences will accept, pushing their ideas forward but not too much at a time, is also more of a restriction in Glasgow than London, which gets a wide variety of work all year.

What they are looking for is high quality work that is theatrical and will entertain, but will also show some awareness of life today and is typical of its area of origin. Ashford sums it up: "I want to see American dance from America; at present you get too much 'American' dance in Britain, France and want to see something distinctively British or French or Italian from those places. Similarly, what I like about Pat Graney's company, which is coming from America, is its specific

They are keen to go on supporting creators they have found and shown before (even, Ashford says, if a new work is slightly disappointing, "It should be seen"). But sometimes they know an opportunity is a one-off occasion. such as the chance, thanks to support from the Goethe Institute, to bring the distinguished German dancer Susanne Linke to Britain for the first time in eight years; will she still be dancing in another

Support from foreign government agencies provides 28 per cent of Ashford's budget this year. Next on the list of supporters is the chief sponsor, Holsten Distributors Lid, with 22 per cent, and then ticket sales at 15 per cent -The Place seats only 250.

That leaves a balance of 35 per cent to be made up from the Arts Council. Visiting Arts and other appreciated sponsors, some offering belp in kind, he Glasgow district and Strathclyde regional councils are the main supporters of Mayfest and the programme book has a full A4 page list of the funding bodies, sponsors, bene-factors and other helpers. Even so, Hill needed to obtain extra support from the Scorush Arts Council and Visiting Arts to make the dance programme possible, and he needed to take the begging bowl round to sponsors to obtain funding for individual companies.

Can they keep it up, especially without Glasgow's "Year of Cul-ture"? They want not just to maintain but to develop the work. Hill would like to see her activities extend from the festival to other seasons throughout the year, to sustain interest. Ashford, on the other hand, would like his Turning World season to resemble a festival, using other theatres too, and he is making a start this year by presenting just one company, Zuni lcosahedron from Hong Kong at the Bloomsbury Theatre.

For such ambitions more help is needed, and they are looking jointly for another participant to share costs. The likeliest choice is in Manchester, since other possible cities such as Leicester and Newcastle are already proceeding

The same erotic encounters could, after all, happen in London; and without the added misery of homesickness. But perhaps the show would not have transferred to New York back in 1985, or be so likely to catch the American tourist-trade now, if Lloyd Webber and his collaborator. already is a bard of failed relationships with Manhattan settings. His name is Stephen Sondheim. He writes sharper, meaner lyrics than Black and harsher, more sardonic music than Lloyd Webber. He would probably also expect a less obviously likeable heroine than Webb, with her pleasant voice, wry warmth and rather moderate passions. When she splinters the ears, as occasionally she does, it is more because of the miking than the emotional pain.

Even the Dance half -- variations on themes both of Paganini and boy-meets-girl - sometimes seems a hit winsome. When those fellows in braces bounce about with those bobby-soxers, the stage can look like a kindergarten for the hyperactive. But Wayne Sleep is at the centre, as in 1982, and his skill and verve are little dimmed. Just when one begins to find the balletic comedy too cute, he will fizz and whirl into top gear. carrying a talented ensemble with him - and perhaps even justify-

For no good reason?

IN ITS own quictly subversive fashion, the Army Lives series (BBC 2) has been calling into parents not emigrated' aspect of question almost every aspect of contemporary military life at home and abroad. Last night it went to West Germany to look at the social welfare system within a camp. Just as you do not have to be especially feminist to realize that the modern British Army is still quite breathtakingly "some 20-something" plays, including five for children. Cyparis, set in Martinique in 1902, is about the only man to chauvinistic, you do not have to be a pacifist to wonder what precisely is being served and what is being destroyed by keeping large numbers of men and their families isolated within barracks in a foreign country with which we have not been at war for nearly half a century. The British Army is no longer in Germany as an occupying force. Rather like a guest left over from some long-past house-party invitation, it is still wandering around, wondering how best to behave now that the rest of the house is no longer being run on quite the same lines, or for the same purposes, or even by the same people. What is bad for the men is a lot worse for their wives: 240 couples a month are now seeking counselling over there. The only such counselling available is that of military or closely affiliated organizations. Thus, the demands of security, tradition and discipline in which the army deals with its own in its own particular ways. As a result unhappy wives are unwilling even to visit the Families Officer for fear of being seen talking to a man known to be in charge of domestic difficulties.

In Germany, all British Army wives are subject to military law. and family support comes from serving officers. If you decide to leave your soldier husband, you get 93 days of temporary housing and then an eviction order. Similarly, if you have a child with an illness which connot be dealt with by the army GP, your family is moved back to Britain and your husband faces career problems because he cannot then travel to other bases.

But if, in peacetime, the Army has trouble dealing with its private lives, in wartime this would seem to have been much less of a problem. Out on Tuesday (Channel 4), which dealt last night with homosexuality in World War II. concluded that black-outs were a kind of gay paradise and under-lined Peter Nichols' old theory texpressed in Privates on Parades that for some soldiers the chance to tour Burma in fishnet stockings and high-heeled shoes was well worth the risk of sudden death.

Susanne Linke and Urs Dietrich: Linke's first British performance in eight years, perhaps her last?

Survivors and reunions

Barbara Lebow wrote A Shayna Maidel in 1984 for the Academy Theatre in her home city of Atlanta, Georgia, She has watched with some amazement as the play has gone on to be produced around the world. Its primary exposure was off-Broadway, where it ran for 16 months: Canada and Israel. The London opening this week marks its European début and enables Lebow to test the appeal of the work beyond its immediate New York Jewish milieu. "It is particularly set in America, but I don't think the values or dynamics in it are peculiar to that culture." the engaging 53-year-old dramatist says of her story of two Polish sisters, separated prior to the Depression, who reunite in New York in 1946. Luisa, the older one, is a Holocaust survivor, who lost her husband, child, and mother in concentration camps and arrives in New York to find her father and, most crucially, her sister Rose, whom she has not seen for almost two decades.

While the play might sound familiar in synopsis, audiences must not expect Ghetto II. The aftermath of war is the issue, not the atrocities. "It's not about the was in Europe, even though that is what is assumed." Lebow says. "It's about the response to that: I'm writing it from the point of view of an American (the sheltered Rose) who was very pro-tected from the Second World War."

Nor, despite a title which means "a pretty girl" in Yiddish, should A Shayna Maidel be viewed solely as an ethnic play. "The title has been a handicap in advance. Even many people who speak Yiddish thought it was some lighthearted Yiddish farce, or a Second Avenue musical. This is not a shmaltzy chicken-soup family drama." Lebow was open to alternate names for the play but was dismayed at the suggestions made.

Lebow: her writing comes from her own experience

While the playwright feels that "emotionally, everything I write comes from my own experience". A Shavna Maidel avoids veiled autobiography. Lebow was born to a father in the garment business and an interior-designer mother and had a "comfortable middleclass" New York upbringing. The Holocaust, she says, was not part of her life directly, and to that end she empathizes with the shock of awareness registered by Rose, whom she finds the play's most prepared.

"In the theatre, the playwright really is in control. I am a valuable resource, as opposed to the screen, where you are a workman who does not know anything except how to put words on paper. They tell you what to do, you do it, and if they don't like it, you have to change it. Maybe the film will be terrific, but it won't be this play." she says. "The play is now the play, whatever happens to it."

New York journalists, who have had fun creating a dour and daunting "Herr Who?" image for Masur, might have been surprised by this performance. The London Philharmonic's formidable horns were unleashed for many a brazen fortissimo: quieter moments were coloured by romantic phrasing. beautifully delivered by a superbly

If Masur's interpretations sometimes looked forward to Manhat-tan, his choice of music seemed like a homage to Leipzig, where he has spent 20 years as music director of the Gewandhaus Orchestra. Schumann's First ("Spring") and Third ("Rhenish") symphonies, Brahms's "St Anthony" Variations: this is meat and drink to an experienced conductor.

Yet Masur managed to combine depiction of summer bursting in.

His conducting technique is deceptive. A flapping bulkiness implies, to the eye, an unfocused geniality, but the apral evidence slight speed changes immaculately executed - suggests that exact meanings are being conveyed. New York has chosen wisely.

Home is where the school is

there is any drawback in home education it is probably, thinks William Rust, aged 14, the lack of opportunity for schoolboy mischief. "You can't mess about," he says. "There's no one to hide behind

o leastly

Such a disadvantage, however, has to be weighed against the attractions of following a morning's interesting work in agreeable surroundings with a pizza lunch and the latest episode of Neighbours: personal and social development, says the teacher in Jo Rust; half an hour's peace, says the mother in her.

Mrs Rust, aged 38, who has been educating her children herself for four years, can afford such relaxed views, given the opinion of many experts that two hours' personal tuition is worth aix in school. According to Dr Roland Meighan, senior lecturer in education at Birmingham University and author of the book Flexischooling (published by Education Now), such efficiency is often the most striking aspect of the situation. "If you talk to the children about what is different, their first answer is how much time you save once you cut out the boring assemblies, the long playtimes, the breaks that occurred just when you were getting interested in something. They may have learnt as much by lunchtime at home as they would in two days in

Dr Meighan has been studying the alternative approach to education for 12 years now. When he first became interested he could locate only about a dozen families engaged in home tuition; now he reckons there are at least 5,000, involving maybe 15,000 children. In America, he says, the figure is thought to have topped a million.

"I think the major motivation is desperation. Most of these families are not ideologically anti-school. They go along with the system until their child gets into trouble, either through something like bullying or through performing poorly. So they have a go at doing it themselves and they are astonished to find it has a lot to commend it."

These parents are acting within their legal rights: only education is compulsory in this country, not schooling. The 1944 Education Act says parents have a statutory duty to see that their children receive education suitable to their "age, ability and aptitude and any special needs", either by sending them to achool or "otherwise".

Education Otherwise, a self-help group which took its name from this clause, was founded 13 years ago to support and advise parents who wanted to exercise their choice, and to help them in their dealings with local education authorities. It now has 2,000 members. The Rusts made their decision after moving from London to Gamlingay, a village near Cambridge, where Graham Rust, aged 39, is creative director of an advertising agency. The approach of formal education for Thomas, their youngest son, coincided with a growing conviction that William was finding his studies increasingly dull. At the same time Mrs Rust, a qualified youth leader, was working in a club for teenagers. "I was seeing all these youngsters whose only ambition was to leave school. It all seemed so depressing, we thought we'd have a try at doing it

For the Lyon family in Bradford, home teaching seemed part of a natural continuum. "We're not negative about schools, nor did we think we had particular qualities which would enable us to do it better," says David Lyon, aged 41, a sociology lecturer. "All we felt was that we'd been the main source of their educational stimulus until they were five, and we couldn't see the point of stopping there."

Sue Lyon, also 41, is a qualified maths teacher, but she regards that as immaterial. She has worked out her own system over the 10 years that she has been educating her four children, aged from six to 15, at

"i ravely stand there and act the teacher. We do have a special room, but it tends to be used more as a resource centre. The children are more likely to take their books from there and bring them into the kitchen. I might answer questions as I'm making a meal. Our view is that all life is educational."

The children's work is frequently project-orientated. "We also try to hitch ourselves to their interests, Mr Lyon says. "At the moment they're very keen on producing a newspaper, so you can use that to teach anything from word process-ing to prose style."

Mrs Rust pursues a similarly flexible approach. "I tend to teach retrospectively, in that I look back at what we've been doing one week and, if I think we've spent a long time on one particular subject, we'll catch up on something else the mext.

For both the Rusts and the Lyons methods will come next year, when the elder children take their GCSEs. The likelihood, Dr Meighan says, is that they will do at least as well as ordinary pupils - "and sometimes such children do astonishingly

Other benefits are less tangible. Mrs Rust believes her som have had a more stable education, and that they have developed more selfmotivation and concentration. For both families classroom discipline tends to be indistinguishable from family discipline, although Mrs Rust adds: They probably argue back more with me than they would a schoolteacher, and say they've got petter ideas. The trouble is they're

The costs of home education are hard to calculate. Mrs Rust says they are high in the sense that she would otherwise have returned to paid employment, Mrs Lyon, on the other hand, who would not, says an awful lot of material is free via libraries, museums, galleries, television and radio.

The big argument against the home method has always been that the children are socially disadvantaged by not constantly mixing with their peer groups. The wide circle of friends and a variety of leisure activities. Dr Meighan argues: "Our vision of school social life is that it is rather wonderful, when in reality it is far more likely to be about avoiding the bully, keeping a low profile and conforming. Families who have one child in and one out of the system say it is the social competence of the one at school they are worried about. The other can handle anyone from a baby to a pensioner." Most DIY educators go to some lengths to ensure their children do not miss out on group activities like sport, music, drama and special outings.

From time to time both the Rusts and the Lyons offer their children the chance to return to the system. So far there have been no takers. "I think they balk at the idea that it has to be all day, every day," Mrs Lyon

It may be that in future the lines will not be so clearly drawn. One small independent institution, the Dame Catherine School in Ticknall, Derbyshire, has six pupils among its 38 boys and girls who are primarily home-educated but come in parttime. Philip Toogood, the head, says: "If I have any criticism of home education, it is that the children never have to belong to a group they have not chosen, and so they may not learn that business of give and take," he says. "Self-development is important as long as you don't think that 'me' is all that it ought to be compulsory; a survey by Personnel Today has concluded that whereas junior staff show no unwilling- Consolidated. ness to slope off as often as possible, eight out of 10 bosses are not taking their full holiday entitlement.

This, they conclude, is a bad thing, and British firms ought to consider following some companies in the United States by writing it into executive contracts that they must go away for at least two weeks

In a time of plummeting sales graphs and exorbitant loan rates, it seems, the rats are getting ever more unwilling to stop racing round in

Technology has comp-ounded the problem: it is now possible for one individual to carry an entire year's commer-cial disasters with him inside a laptop computer which can, at a pinch, be concealed from the family inside an artfully folded pair of boxer shorts.

Perhaps the most revealing line in the report, though, was that most of the bosses say that a fortnight's trip abroad with the family is more stressor having a week off at home, Here they have a point. We are, inevitably, talking about a majority of men; and it is an unfortunate quirk of fate and biology that just when a man gets to the stage of controlling a department full of bickering, unpredictable, back-stabbing staff, his family life has generally matured as well, provid-

For a start, there is the painful loss of control and direction. I bet if there was a more searching survey, it. would discover that men who go hiking or sailing or climb-ing with their families are more willing to take the time off than those who are locked. into the airport-and-resort pattern of holidays. ### Trick-tock

A new nocket-sized commuter which purports to cure jet-lag is based on the principle that normal bodily functions are naturally linked to local light and time conditions, so regular international travel across time zones can confuse the metabolism and result in tiredness, indigestion, poor physical performance and lack of concentration. The Bioclok ynchronizes the traveller's body clock by calculating the amount of exposure to light needed to "trick" the body back to equilibrium. You simply enter your time of departure, local time of arrival, length of flight (including stopovers) and direction. The device will then inform you how much extra light exposure you need when you arrive at your destination - which might mean positioning yourself by a large window if you go straight to a meeting, or making a point of taking a walk. Interested guinea-pigs

will be able to find the Bioclok at Leading Edge shops for £79.95 from this month.

Beauty lips

Why choose between lip protection and lip colour in the summer — or smear one on the other - when you can have both in one slick stick? RoC, the skin protection specialist, has introduced RoC Treatment Lipstick, a fragrancefree, hypo-allergenic formula including Vitamin E and ultra-violet filters in a glossy, moisturizing film. There are 10 shades to choose from three of them pearlized, and they have just come into the shops at £5.25.

Sous culottes

Slowdown creates a sudden slump

he price of industrial land in England and Wales increased last year by an average of 47 per cent, the consultants Healey & Baker report in their second survey of industrial land.

The survey shows that between 1977 and 1989 the price of industrial land increased on average by 17.8 per cent per annum compound, while average rental growth on industrial property was 11.9 per cent per annum compound.

Land prices peaked in September 1989, says John Organ, of Healey & Baker, and since then industrial land prices have fallen by between either B1 mixed use or retail 10 and 20 per cent. "This is use has seen substantial indue to the impact of high creases in value. Land used for interest and a re-adjustment of food retailing has increased in the investment yields avail-able to institutions, reflecting annum compound since 1977, their perception of a slowdown in rental growth. Business-use sites have probably dropped by between 20 per cent and 30 per cent, depending on location, for similar reasons and due to the slowdown in the take-up rate of

out-of-town office space." Mr Organ said that strong demand for industrial sites remained, but the drop in business-unit site values meant that there was a better chance of acquiring sites for "shed" developments. "There still remains a shortage of new

industrial and warehouse buildings, particularly in the South-east, and we anticipate continuing rental growth from this area.'

The survey shows that land classified as standard industrial land in 1977 but which has since been developed for creases in value. Land used for value by 35 per cent per compared with 17.8 per cent for standard industrial land, 21.9 per cent for B1 and 28.5 per cent for non-food retailing.

Where high-visibility sites can attract consent for development other than industrial, higher prices are available. Developers are prepared to pay 1.5 times more for land to be developed for BI use, 2.8 times more for non-food retailing sites and five times higher for food superstore sites.

The West Midlands experienced the largest increase, 176

values in the year to November 1989. Healey & Baker say this was mainly the result of sites being purchased at current prices in a market which had seen little activity since the early 1980s. The Southwest saw a growth in land values of 88 per cent and the South-east of 28 per cent.

East Anglia had the highest growth in industrial land values over the past 12 years, with a compound growth rate of 20.4 per cent per annum, followed by the West Midlands (20.2 per cent) and the South-west (19.5 per cent).

Healey & Baker expect values to stabilize over the next year in line with the economic slowdown. In 1989 the vacancy rate increased for the first time since 1983, and this is likely to continue as more supply reaches the market, reducing rental growth.

The supply of industrial buildings will adjust as investment decreases due to high interest rates and slow growth, but the supply of mixed-use and B1 buildings is less responsive to economic change because of the longer "lead-in" time for development. However, Mr Organ says: "We anticipate the schemes which were started in the boom will be adequate to meet the demand in 1990."

Can drivers clean up their act in time?

ecil Parkinson's vision of a motorists' self-help campaign against the greenhouse effect was received with mixed feelings by conservationists yesterday. The Secretary of State for Transport predicted at a conference on Monday that substantial cuts in carbon dioxide (CO2) emissions from vehicles could not be achieved in Britain in the next 20 years, but he suggested that drivers could achieve fuel savings of up to 10 per cent by tuning their engines and 15 per cent by changing their driving habits.

The effect of this kind of action is real, but limited," says Tessa Robertson, of the World Wide Fund for Nature, which organized the conference in London. "People can do a lot by changing the way they drive, but I do not think the full benefits can be gained without tax incentives to encourage better practice."

This week's hot weather highlights the urgency of the issue; ozone levels in London rose above the World Health Organization's recommended safety levels for the first time this year.

National Society for Clean Air today starts a 24-hour "Fume Line" (0836 405-100), which the public can phone if they see vehicles emitting excessive fumes. In Not-tingham, the local Friends of the Earth and Transport 2000 groups are promoting what they claim will be the first "car-free day" in a British city tomorrow. "I do not think we will see a noticeable reduction in cars coming into the reduction in cars coming into the town," says Lisa Kerslake, of Nottinghamshire FOE. "Our aim is to make people aware of the problem."

Mary Blake, of Friends of the Earth, says: "The first thing needed to help you drive more cleanly is to choose the car with the lowest possible fuel consumption. Do not overload it, or create unnecessary wind resistance by carrying a roof rack unless you need it. Then drive smoothly and avoid aggressive driv-ing. There is evidence that using radial rather than cross-ply tyres can bring a fuel saving of 6 to 8 per

The motoring organizations offer broadly similar advice. Clive White, a press officer with the Automobile Association, says: "If a car is driven sensibly, it is possible to make quite considerable savings in fuel use and emissions."

The AA is uncertain about Mr Parkinson's call for better engine tuning, however, and points out that most modern cars have complex systems to control fuel eff-iciency, which are quite reliable so long as the owner follows the ufacturer's servicing schedules. But it points out that it can be worth checking that older vehicles are still doing as many miles to the gallon as they should.

adviser to the Government on traffic planning, agrees that there would be gains if drivers could be taught to drive less assertively, "I, would go further than Mr Parkinson," he says. "I think we ought to have a complete overhaul of our shoddy driver-training system."

Research by the WWF suggests that if road users simply observed the existing 70 mph speed limit, fuel consumption would be cut by as much as 2.4 per cent.

making high speeds over long distances - something the battery car cannot yet provide.

That leaves two main options in the short term: diesel and "hybrid" cars using a mix of two fuels. Volkswagen-Audi says diesel is a good option, despite its reputation for smoky and smelly emissions. The latest diesel engines can achieve fuel savings of 30 per cent over petrol, and harmful emissions are However, the "hybrid" car may be the one which emerges as "the people's choice" in the next few years. Many of the major manufacturers, such as BMW, Audi, VW, and now Lotus, have developed models powered by both batteries and petrol. A computer sensor under the bonnet decides which fuel is best. On long high-speed runs in open country, a petrol engine, equipped with a catalytic converter, powers

LA DISCOVERS THE SKY AGAIN

os Angeles today: gas-guzzlers jamming the freeways. Re-sult: a pall hanging over the city that makes the air the dirtiest in America.

Los Angeles in the year 2000: electric cars running along underground cables, millions of lorries running on cleaner-burning fuels, petrol stations seiling methanol. Result: clear blue skies.

This, at least, is the vision of clean-air campaigners laid out in a plan drawn up by the South Coast Air Quality Management District, which by 2007 would improve visibility in downtown Los Angeles from the present 16 miles to more than 75 miles. By 1998 it aims to have 40 per cent of cars and 70 per cent of lorries and buses running on clean fuels. And by 2008, it wants car makers to produce only vehicles that run on electricity and other alternative fuels.

The visionary scheme has already begun to take shape. Local officials recently announced plans to build an experimental 1,000ft "powered roadway" for electric cars, which could recharge their batteries from a cable running under the road. And the California Rapid Transit District has started to take delivery of a fleet of methanol-fuelled buses. Car makers and oil companies have taken some well-publicized steps to clean up their image. Last September Arco, the largest oil company on the West Coast, started to market a reformulated petrol called EC-1 to replace leaded petrol used by pre-1975 cars, which lack catalytic converters. Arco claims EC-1 reduces the emission of pollutants by 20 per cent. Both Arco and Chevron have also equipped some service stations with methanol. Unocal Corp, the Los Angeles-based energy conglomerate, recently went one better by offering to pay $700 each for the first 7,000 pre-1971 cars driven into a local junkyard to be turned into scrap; it also offered owners who turned in their gas-guzziers a one-month bus pass. But more traditional methods may eventually help Los Angeles control the scourge of exhaust fumes. Later this year, citizens will vote on whether to double the state's tax on petrol.

James Bone own measured battle against

Morning looks like becoming a fixture ay Day, of all tra-ditional festivals, has had shocking liberties and such competition up on Aristotle Bridge But clearly. if the excesses of the main May Morning are to be curbed, the breakaway revellers will need a secret weapon to maintain their support. They have one. At 6.15, just as interest was beginning to wane and teenagers in flowered hats were considering defecting, a low rumbling sound and an eerie, supernatural mooing heralded the appearance of a life-sized plaster ox garlanded in May-blossom and ridden by a selfpossessed six-year-old May Queen, Georgina Bell-Black.

his animal, a model for Black's projected bizarre bronze ox statue for the city, was hauled by four strong men and attached to a giant bellows, which pro-duced the mournful moo via a car manifold and a battered organ-pipe. The teenagers decided to stay. Followed by a growing crowd, the great bull was heaved through the dancers and on to the bridge beneath the slightly swaying canvas tower. It sloshed, slightly, and when expert hands manipulated a tap in its plaster pizzle, it was revealed as holding 18 gallons of best bitter.
"What is this?" asked a lone

French tourist. I am staying in this hotel, I go to May morning, a man tell me there is a better May morning up here, so I come." She took a photograph. "The ox," a don-nish woman said judicially. "] don't think that has any particular May Day significance, has it?"

"Laden with it, madam! Laden with it!" boomed the sculptor, appearing beneath its pendulous undercarriage.
There is no point making special arrangements to attend this alternative traditionalist May Morning next year. Black refuses to be committed. It may even change bridges, and reappear somewhere else entirely. Traditions don't always decay or fossilize. Sometimes they are born, too.

THE SEARCH FOR ALTERNATIVE POWER ing a model which can alternate otus, the maker of highperformance cars, seems the least likely company to design a car using the same technology which fuels a milk float. Yet it is testing a £42,500 Esprit sports car which could run at 160mph on both petrol and battery power.

The keenest debate among car

manufacturers is no longer about how to extract noxious gases from exhaust fumes; this can now be achieved by the catalytic converter, which will be compulsory on all new petrol-fuelled cars within two years. The problem is how to replace, or make better use of, the fuels which emit carbon dioxide, the gas blamed for contributing to global warming, particularly since the Transport Department calculates that traffic will more than double by early in the next century.

Car makers warn that petrol and diesel fuel will still be in use in the year 2000 despite a huge investment in battery technology and clean fuels such as methanol.

Doubts still prevail over the viability of methanol and whether it is better than petrol as a fuel source, although Mercedes-Benz is developbetween the two fuels at the turn of a switch. The efficient use of electricity to power cars still eludes manufacturers, who cannot discover how to lengthen the life of the unwieldy and heavy batteries needed. General

Motors, the world's biggest car maker, is, however, planning an all-electric car, called the impact, capable of 130 miles to a charge yet with performance similar to that of conventional saloon cars. Power will come from 32 lead-acid batteries stacked in the centre of the car. Two of Europe's biggest manufac-turers, Peugeot and Fiat, will have battery-powered cars on sale in the next few weeks -- both versions of existing petrol-driven models, and claiming up to 100 miles travelling from one overnight charge of

Given that the average car journey in Britain is about 10 miles, battery power could provide an immediate solution for the environmentally aware commuter. However, the demand for high performance will remain, so travellers will still be faced with the problem of

The most common form of cancer in women, One woman in every twelve is likely to suffer from breast cancer. Until now the treatment has involved major surgery which, unavoidably, leaves scars. Physical and mental. That's why a new technique pioneered by the imperial Cancer Research Fund's breast cancer unit at Guy's Hospital is of such crucial importance. Some women will still need a mastectomy. But for an ever-growing number of patients, localised surgery can be used to remove the lump instead of the whole breast.

Heartening news for every woman. And for that matter their nearest and dearest. Just as encouraging is the fact that more and more cancer centres nationwide can now offer similar techniques thanks to the widespread sharing of information and ideas.

Thanks to the Imperial Cancer Research Fund, not every woman with breast cancer has to live without a breast.

The Imperial Cancer Research Fund has been at the forefront in much work that has led to a number of equally critical advances. Without doubt lives have been saved and certain cancers that at one time seemed incurable, aren't. However, there is still much to be done. As for the future. it's our belief that it's now a question of when cancer is cured, not if. But all our work is funded by voluntary contributions, and could not carry on without them.

In fact, of every pound volunteered over ninety pence goes directly to research. This allows the Fund to continue to employ a body of over one thousand top scientists, doctors and technicians in some of the most up-to-date research establishments and hospitals, throughout the country. So you see that when you give to the Imperial Cancer Research Fund you're not simply giving to charity.

You're giving hope.

For there's no organisation more likely than us to prove, once and for all, what is already the truth for many: there is life after cancer.

A place for the independents

BROADCAST

s the Broadcasting Bill returns to the Commons, independent producers still hope to consolidate further their position. The Bill gives independents 25 per cent access to most television production. What the producers now argue about is the terms of this trade. In particular, can they be guaranteed sizeable rights in ongoing programme exploitation? Not for the first time, the model is the American

In the United States, financial interest rules still severely restrict the extent to which networks may take a position in after-sales. As a consequence, it is argued, there is a thriving secondary market. Without such a market, rapid deployment of additional satellite and cable services might have been thwarted. So, should not such a system be applied to us, now that we find ourselves with acres of airtime?

The lobbying by the independents is persistent and understandable. What is harder to understand is the studied silence of the broadcasting networks, not only on this particular point but over the position of the independents in general. The BBC once promised explicitly a careful analysis of comparative costs and comparative quality so that a rational and open debate could take place. Apparently the data is hard for analysis to handle. So no report, and no

There are two points on which broadcast networks should seek to offer clarity. First, do independent quotas do much damage to economies of scale? ITV's economies were of course frequently vitiated by louche industrial practice, but the BBC's operational efficiencies were rightly proclaimed by Michael Checkland in carlier managerial days as unrivalled in the developed television world. Is that still the

Then, as we edge towards the 25 per cent target, what do broadcasters say about consistency of quality? Clearly the sheer expansion of broadcast hours has led everywhere to a boom in inexpensive programming, what Paul Bonner of the ITVA calls paperback TV as against hardback. But in the hardback areas of higher-cost shows, where expectations are greater, what does the record show? And, in particular, how far is any freshness that independents offer offset by waywardness?

One school of contemporary argument says that this last point no longer matters. The rules for independent access specifically exempt News and Current Affairs in their daily manifestations. So the editorial heartland would seem secure. The proferred analogy is with the Press. A paper may parade an idiosyncratic swirl of commentators and columnists, but provided the newsflow and the leader page remain under the editor's firm control then the soul of the enterprise is judged not to be

The analogy, like most analogies with press/broadcasting, is unhelpful. Broadcast networks serve a broader purpose than newspapers. Their commitment both to entertain and to enlighten looms larger. So, when we think of broadcasting's heartland, we think, too, of Granada's range of fiction, of LWT's arts, of the BBC's natural history, its serials, its comedy (often, if not always), and (massively these spring weekends) its sport. How far may these operations, and a score of others that could be substituted, lose clout once a quarter of the workload is borne by others? One should concede in passing that the outgoing system is a fairly flexible affair. Especially in the world of fiction, actors, directors, writers, come and go, back and forth across channel divides to wherever the work seems challenging and attractive, and always have. To that extent the freelance world and the independent world are kissing cousins, and there is perhaps minor significance in change.

But in major companies, crucially underpinning these transient talents has lain steady and skilled craft support. from cameramen and recordists, from editors and dubbing specialists, from designers, costumiers and make-up. Whenever a British programme has bounded round the world to growing applause, it has been their work, alongside that of the better-known stars, that has been singled out for praise. Under the new conditions, is such work in significant jeopardy?

raftsmen may nowadays be following producers so willingly into independence that the end result is bound to be a looselimbed casualized industry, come what may. And it may be that consequent worries about training, about consistency, about sustained style, are simply old-hat in the multi-channel conditions of the 1990s. But any broadcasters who, still assert that quality is a higher good than quotas had better leave coyness behind and spell out the implications now, before the writing on the wall becomes the wording in the Bill.

Hazards of health warnings

Will red tape strangle the humorous, snappy radio commercial?

Britain's second largest building society, which helped pioneer humorous and effective radio commercials promoting products ranging from mortgages to savings and investment schemes, is seriously considering dropping the £2 million spent annually on radio advertising. And can you blame Nationwide?

Snappy 30-second advertisements face being reduced to boring gobbledegook thanks to the men from the ministry - in this case the Department of Trade and Industry.

The new regulations, which came into force in February, mean a typical Nationwide Anglia radio commercial must include a disclaimer, read out on air, that says:

"Mortgages (or loans) subject to status, valuation, security and some-times to a suitable life or mortgage guarantee policy. Written quotations available from Nationwide Anglia Building Society, Chesterfield House, Bloomsbury Way, London.

"Your home is at risk if you do not keep up repayments on a mortgage or other loan secured on it."

Pending that out takes between 12

Reading that out takes between 13 and 15 seconds. Any message aimed at consumers is likely to be rendered ineffective by a disclaimer giving the impression that everything is not as it should be. One commercial radio station has already lost £10,000 worth of building society advertising and expects to lose £100,000 in revenue over the next year. The consumer credit disclaimer is only the latest example of a "health warning" which Whitehall or Brussels says must be included in television, radio and press advertisements - and many more are in the pipeline. The Advertising Association has identified a host of industries and services where the EC is threatening the "freedom to advertise", including tobacco, food, pharmaceuticals, al-cohol, cars and financial services. Brian West, the director of the Association of Independent Radio Contractors, says: "People in govern-ment here or in Europe seem hell-bent on legislating a lot of advertising out of existence. It is not a question of removing what might be misleading claims, which has been the way of regulating advertising in the past. They are giving us a form of words which must be included in an advert, come bell or high water. Overall it is a worrying situation.

"With the consumer credit regulations you are having to add words, which means you have to cut other things out or add to the length of the advert, which will cost more. The disclaimer numbs the effect of the advert and turns off listeners. We have suggested a shorter form of words to the DTI, but they have said

Although health warnings first appeared for tobecco products long ago, the regulation of advertisements has tended to concentrate on what should be excluded - such as misleading claims - rather than what should be included.

But over the past two years advertisements for goods, ranging from pesticides to children's toys, weight-loss products and telephone equipment, have had to carry warnings. The Financial Services Act contains reams of instructions on what must appear in advertisements.

Many of the obligatory inserts are the result of lobbying by consumer and pressure groups. But taken to-gether, do they help or hinder con-"Each health warning has perfectly respectable parentage and perfectly legitimate objectives and fulfils real or perceived consumer protection needs. But taken altogether, they do the reverse and reduce consumer choice," said one senior official from the Independent Broadcasting Authority, which vets commercials on ITV and Channel 4.

The Incorporated Society of British Advertisers plans a campaign against the plethora of health warnings and

Ken Miles, the ISBA director, said:

"What we object to is a tendency for people to say 'This is how you must put it'. That is a very negative line of thought. It doesn't work for consumers and it won't help companies to get across the positive element of their

Maxwell's European campaign

The first issue of The European appears next week. Charles Wintour spoke to its Editor in Chief about his plans looking several inches wider round in six months." the waist since we last talked some stretch for The European? To vladivostok!", he replied expansively. We were sitting in his 10th floor living room in the London Maxwell House, when the London Maxwell House, which was made to the London Maxwell House, which was made to the London Maxwell House, when the London Maxwell House, which was made to the London Maxwell House, which Show, Now it was my turn, the London Maxwell House, "How much space is Peter there were four marble col-Jenkins giving you?", he enquired, momentarily giving the distinguished columnist of The Independent unexpected influence over the media glass-topped coffers, two pages of The Times.

But when we started talking a smallish bronze elephant about the prospects for The European, the publication he arranged. It was impossible is launching on May 11, he had all the arguments virtually word-perfect. He conceived the idea 10 years - no, 22 years ago, in the first Dubcek era. "It is right that The European should be launched in the year when Dubcek is re-elected as president of the Czechosiovak Federated Parliament."

I said the dummy looked quite good. "Good?" he said. "It is brilliant?" He explained that the colour was even better than "Mirror colour" or anything "Rupert" would pro-duce, because the paper had pioneered the use of Scitex equipment. Normally each colour picture in a newspaper needed three different colour separations, involving much time and money, together it because it is a Maxwell with some loss of definition. publication and the bearded With Scitex it was "all done in one pass, with no loss of definition . . . The sale of 225,000, guaranteed to advertisers for the first six months, is regarded as modest. "Our research shows that there are 50 million English speakers in Europe," he said. "Demand will be far higher than anyone has given us credit." The initial print run will be a million plus and "indications are" that it will continue at that level for a month. Yet some critics had concentrated on rubbishing publication and the bearded for did he say 'weirded'?] Left love nothing better than hating me". He is particularly irked, however, by the widely mooted suggestion that, because the London Daily News folded after only five months, prospects for The European are clouded. "The editorial was excellent". Mr Maxwell blames the printing and distribution arrangements concept, placing a heavy extra burden on the editorial staff as well as vastly increasing costs, was an additional factor. The whole production cycle became a licence to lose money. This time round, Mr Maxwell has learnt the lesson. The European is not the daily that was originally conceived, but a weekly, and printing will take place, initially, in Paris, West Germany and Hungary as well as at the Mirror plant outside London. Seventy members of the editorial staff will be based in London and the remaining 30 to 40 in Europe. In financial terms, it

Mr Maxwell would not be surprised if it came at the end of Year One.

What about the editorial? The paper's fact sheet states: "The European will support all those in favour of European Unity and oppose all those who are against. The European will be independent and free of party politics."

Doesn't that suggest the paper will be anti-Thatcher? Mr Maxwell explained that Mrs Thatcher has rendered three great services to Britain. She has taught the trade union berons that economic laws apply to them as much as to the rest of the country. She has defeated Labour in three successive General Elections and thus compelled the party to shed all its uscless ideological luggage, and become a modern, electable, social democratic party. And, until inflation returned, she had

And what would be the relationship between the Editor in Chief and the Editor? Mr Watson would be in exactly the same position as he was once to Lord Hartwell, had sometimes become too immersed in detail. "The only difference is that I won't deal with a terrible amount of detail. But I am the guarantor to the Europeans that this is not just an English charade." Mr Maxwell talked elo-quently about Europe. "I am a ssionate believer in Europe. I understand the Europeans. I came from central Europe. Now Gorbachov has admitted that communism has failed irretrievably and the cold war is at an end. Phiralism and democracy, free markets and capitalism, are on the march. I am excited by the opportunities in Europe. That is why I passionately believe in the need for this newspaper. We will make all national newspapers give more space to Europe. We have to give more space to Europe because what's going on there is so

The BBC sweeps the board

امكذا من الأصل

A bouquet makes a change from the brickbats

BBC Radio, the underrated jewel in the corporation crown, surpassed itself this week. The four stations managed to scoop 27 of the 33 Sony Radio Awards - a remarkable achievement by any standards (Richard Evans, Media Editor, writes).

Some Conservative MPs never miss a chance to have a swipe at Auntie, whether for supposed "bias" on Radio 4's Today programme or for an "anti-Government" slant in a documentary. However certain BBC governors and senior managers are that Today and similar challenging programmes amount to first-rate journalism, a nagging doubt begins to enter even the most resolute minds following the drip-dripdrip of political criticism.

It must, therefore, have been especially pleasing for BBC executives to have seen Today win the best daily news award, and share the prize for the best response to a news event for its handling of the Romanian revolution.

Jenny Abramsky, the editor of news and current affairs at BBC radio. said: "We are very proud of our success. The Today programme has received some brickbats, but this is a further endorsement from an independent organization of the pro-gramme's quality and integrity."

Other awards for BBC radio's current affairs coverage went to the BBC reporter James Miles for his coverage of the demonstrations in Tiananmen Square last year. Radio 4 also won the award for the best documentary feature for its report "The Indissoluble Union - Cotton, Chemicals and Corruption".

Today's evening counter-part, The World Tonight, won the award for the best current affairs programme; the Face the Facts series was a joint winner of the outstanding service to the community award; and the channel's Health Show won the prize for the best education DECEMBER OF STREET

Drumming for Utopia

hanks to Clive James and his obsession with an absurd television game show called Endurance, the Japanese are now seen as a people who will inflict extreme punishments upon themselves for the sake of enjoyment. The Kodo company does not exactly contradict the stereotype; based since 1971 on the Japanese island of Sado (a name which itself invites an obvious suffix: masochism), this community of fitness fanatics, deep greens and devoted percussionists has developed an extraordinarily dramatic, ritualistic musical form based around varying sizes of traditional Japanese drums. The music is not strictly a Japanese tradition, but shows signs of influences from Java, Korea, Trinidadian steel-bands and the master African drummers of Burundi. Its severely controlled dynamics and thunderous climaxes glorify the idea of a unified community that lives in harmony with the earth. This simple Utopianism, along with the stirring noise, the visual theatre of the Taiko drums especially the huge O-Daiko, and the chastening sight of so much energy and muscle all add up to a thrilling and very popular spectacle. "Let's experience the energy of the earth together" is the invitation proffered by Kodo. In these green-conscious times this is an effective rallying cry. Sadler's Wells Theatre. Rosebery Avenue. Despite the success of Britain's black athletes, boxers, cricketers and footballers, Christopher Terril's punchy documentary questions the proposition that sport is less colourblind then other areas of society. It is said that young blacks are stereotyped as sportsmen because they are not considered to be good at anything else and are second class citizens again as soon as they get out of their kit. Black athletes find it harder to get the sponsorship which is essential for developing their skills. Blacks may make up half the them make it as administrators or national coaches. The film also tackles the old conundrum of why Yorkshire, no longer the most talented or successful of county cricket clubs, has failed to find a single player from among its huge Asian community. Even the forthright Brian ms stuck for an an though it may be implicit in his motion that Asians born in Bradford are foreigners. (Ceetax)

7,30 Coronation Street, (Oracle) 8.00 Up the Garden Path. Sue Limb's comedy is a transplant repeating her bubbly portrayal of the podgy, disorganized English teacher, who lives in a tip, feeds her face with chocolate cake and has romantic designs on a man who inconveniently happens to be married. As with After Henry, another radio-

originated sitcom, the question is whether the addition of pictures are occasions, as when Staunton fantasizes about eliminating the boylinend's wife, when sound only would have served better But only television can bring out the full dimension of Staumton's performance, which is much enriched by its body movements and facial expressions. Nicholas Le Prevost, as Staunton's would be lover, is heard more than seen in this promising first episode but there are the makings of strong supporting performances from Te Peake-Jones and Mike Grady as taunton's fellow teachers

E.50 Tha Room Lucius Show, New series staming the talented ventriloquist Mistress of Suspense: Sauce for 9.00 Mistra the Goose.

 The title Master of Suspense having long been appropriated by Affred award on Patricia Highsmith for its series based on her short stones. As it happens tonight's offering, Sauce for the Goose, could almost have been made by Hitchcock for one of his lelevision shows in the 1950s. The old rescal would certainly have relished the macabre denouement, lan McShane plays a smarmy second-rate crooner who checks in at the easide hotel run by Olivia (Gwen Taylor) and her dreary, complaining husband (Benjamin Whitrow). Olivia is swept off her feet by the smoothtaling newcomer and before long the two of them are plotting a murder. If if the characters stay mainly on the surface, skilled playing by Taylor and McShame sustains the interest.

investigation into obscene telephone cells which was first shown a year ago, it is estimated that four women in 10 receive such calls, many of which threaten physical violence. One woman describes the experience as mental rape and another sleeps with a carving knife under her pillow. But obscene calls are officially regarded as a nuisance, rather than a serious orime, and are ranked as a level three offence, in the same category as not paying a talevision ficence. Nor are they taken seriously by the police, and convictions are few. With computantized exchanges, it should be easier to trace calls, which could be the key to the problem. A report from New

As yet there was no charge and the matter was not sub judice and could be discussed. Mr Anthony Beaumont-Dark (Birmingham, Selly Oak, C) said these people should not be allowed to become scapegoats for others' inefficiency.

 Britain is to make a second attempt today to persuade Greece that Paul Ashwell, the Northampton lorry driver arrested in connection with the Iraqi gun, is an innocent victim (Andrew McEwen

Mr Ashwell, aged 26, is still in prison at the Greek port of Patras, where his lorry was intercepted by Greek Customs who found what appeared to be parts of the alleged gun.

Sir David Miers, the British Ambassador, will go to the Greek Ministry of Justice today to raise his case. Mrs Margaret Thatcher took it up with Mr Constantine Mitsotakis, the Prime Minister, at the Dublin summit on Sat-Middlesbrough last month. A urday but so far the Greek authorities have not made their position clear.

THE Indus proved equal to its reputation when a Brtish expedition tested the waters before embarking on an attempt at the first successful navigation of the river (writes Lin Jenkins). Within minutes of testing the stretches above Skardu in northern Pakistan, Mr Mick Hopkinson, an experienced canonist, was in trouble (above).

Mr John Taylor, expedition leader, said: "He hit a big hole, a stopper wave, which is the dread of all canceists. It grabbed his kayak and held it, playing with him as a cat would with a mouse His kayak was tossed around end over end with Mick fighting for air in between capsizes.

"Most deaths on big river expeditions have occurred in the early days before the necessary build-up of confidence and honing of skills. A natural fear of the power of a big river has to be overcome by each person to allow them to master the river," said Mr Taylor.

The expedition called "the Taming of the Lion", after the Buddhist legend that the river flowed from the month of a lion, has been practising on the quieter stretches before beginning its 100-mile descent down one of the toughest stretches of water in the world.

A hydrangea-bush in full flower? No. It was Dame Jill Knight (Edgebaston), in a vast floral design of blue, turquoise and pink. How could the cameras - or Mr Speaker - resist?

"Dame Jill Knight," he called, as the cameras spun. The hydrangea bush questioned the Health Secretary about doctors' pay. The hydrangeas had a point, as Kenneth Clarke's replies revealed this to have risen from £12,330 in 1979 to £33,280 The bush resumed its seat, ample blossoms trembling.

After that, to the bees and me, the rest of Health Questions seemed an anti-climax. We awaited the entrance of the Prime Minister.

At this, Edwina Currie swayed so enticingly that it seemed that if the cameras would not come to Mrs Currie, Mrs Currie would come to the cameras. Maybe she has forgotten the King of Siam's remark in The King

Where another woman might carry with her a tin of Elastoplast or a spare button, in case of sudden need, Mrs Thatcher carries a list of the five authorities with the worst record on anythingvou-please, in case a passing MP for Medway should be caught short just before a local election. She produced it, leaving the now-traditional pause after eachname, for the Tories to chorus "Labour!"

Ted Heath shook his head, aghast at the vulgarity. The nasturtiums grinned, the Speaker sighed and the bees for whom this whole show had been contrived - whirted happily around the Chamber.

Chairman aims to quadruple sales to £200m in five years

Rank Xerox to multiply with glasnost

By Wolfgang Münchan, European Business Correspon theless. Mr Thompson considers the RANK Xerox, one of the largest manufacturers of photocopiers, has unveiled plans to quadruple its exposure to the Soviet market during the next five years. Photocopiers have until recently been widely banned throughout the Eastern bloc, partly in an attempt to curb the spread of "subversive" pamphlets and literature. They are now being considered a typical product of the glasnost era. The market for photocopiers is still depressed with 40 copiers per 1 million of the Soviet population against 3,000 per 1 million in Western Europe.

Mr David Thompson, chairman of Rank Xerox (UK), said he hoped to increase sales from £50 million per year to at least £200 million in five years although Xerox's market share, currently at 50 per cent, will drop sharply as a result of increased competition from Japanese companies, like Canon. NeverEastern bloc market as the fastest growing in the world during this decade. The company will invest about £11 million over the next 18 months to expand its Eastern European business. But with a shortage of foreign currency in the Soviet Union about 70 per cent of revenues will be settled in harter deals. "We have become handy at trading in camel saddles, animal feed, fertilizer, hanging baskets, marble, furniture and other fascinating goods," Mr Thompson said. "Two of our favourite products are Bulgarian beer and wine." The high proportion of barter trade against hard currency is unlikely to fall in the near future, as the Soviets, who until recently enjoyed a reputation for paying promptly, now find it increasingly difficult to meet payment terms. Xerox, which has been trading with

TEMPUS_ No surprises as latest Ellis call heralds collapse in share price

Everard's shares have twice raced towards 240p, only to collapse each time to about 180p. Ellis is a bit puzzled by this volatility.

Stakes held by the board chaired by Mr Mike Marshall - and ICI account for more than 30 per cent of the equity, making a bid unlikely, and a dozen British institutions have been stable holders of a further 50 per cent.

However, if the magnitude of the share price fluctuations remains a mystery, the timing of the latest collapse should come as no surprise. The shares fell 16p to 180p yesterday on news of a 1-for-3 rights issue at 152p. The bulk of the £29 million proceeds will go towards the acquisition of two more US chemical distributors, 18 months after a £25 million call for the same DUTDOSC

The 1988 call caused a temporary setback to the share price, but at least Ellis could then look back on a five-year period in which earnings per share had grown at an annua rate of 25 per cent. Now, Ellis is less well supported by its immediate record.

The company estimates that its profits for the year ended though such a move could not last month will be not less be ruled out at some time. than £15 million, though it According to a spokesman does not forecast its earnings.

British Gas is keen to achieve Brokers estimate that, at best, these will turn out at about 18p, just 6 per cent up on the

17p notched up in 1988-89. However, after the 16 per cent rise to 9.3p in the first half, that result would imply some decline in the second. Of course, a smooth record of earnings growth is not everything — although it is quite important for a company making regular calls on shareholders to support its expansion. Ellis's latest US purchases, HVC and Kramer, will extend its existing distribution businesses in the eastern seaboard and southern states. It is paying $29.5 million for companies which made $4 million before tax, but a low tax charge and economies on insurance costs mean the price works out at less than 12 times carnings.

If Ellis makes £21 million in the current year, boosting its own earnings by another penny to 19p, the prospective

LOFs

THE one-year share price graph of London & Overseas Freighters looks like a series of high tide waves - showing a share price which rolled from 76p last May to touch 120p in July, fell back to 77p in October, then challenged 125p again in March, only to fall back to 111p.

The year's profit performance is somewhat smoother, and, since showing a $1.9 million pre-tax loss in 1988, and a $1 million pre-tax profit in 1989, there has been further progress to $1.32 million of pre-tax profits for the year ended March 31, 1990.

The result, and the outlook, is good enough to justify the dividend rising from 0.6p to lp - only the third dividend payment since 1980 - covered a healthy 6.2 times by sterling

LOFs still suffers from a debt burden with gross in-terest charges of $1.84 million on $16 million of debt, though the fleet repair bill which jumped from $274,000 to $836,000 could be non-recurring. In addition, administration expenses rose from $500,000 to $804,000.

The group's two eight-year-old vessels are plying at higher average daily charter rates ($1,400 up at $13,600 a day) and remain in demand. One spent most of the year on charter to Chevron, the other was largely in US and European waters.

LOFs is likely to acquire modern tankers this year, deals which will be funded internally, so the debt burden could start to rise again.

The substantial part of the equity (64 per cent) remains in the hands of the Kulukundis family, who despite specific mention of the higher costs of maintaining a share market quote, intend to keep LOFs

if charter rates remain firm, net earnings should sail forward again this year - possibly to the 7.3p a share level. At 111p, up 5p on results, the prospective p/e is 15.2 well above the market, and well up with the tide.

Ashley Group

SPAIN may no longer be a fashionable holiday place but it is all the rage among British businesses, especially retailers. Ashley Group, which is run by part of the old has been there longer than most, with the bulk of its profits coming from Spanish food retailing.

Spain is attractive to food retailers for a number of reasons. The economy has one of the best growth rates in Europe, the market is fragmented and immature, and there is scope for sales and margin growth through the use of the types of systems and technology which have brought riches to the large British food retailers.

Ashley certainly appears to be reaping the benefits. Pre-tax profits for the six months to February were £5.84 million, up from £1.86 million on sales of £123 million, up from £89 million, Earnings per share rose from 2.82p to 4.11p and the interim dividend is 0.65p, up from 0.5p.

Digsa, the Spanish food distribution business which operates 177 Compre Bien stores and has 579 franchised CB Ahorro supermarkets, contributed £3.4 million, up from £1.78 million, Like-forlike sales growth is about 5 per cent and there are plans for six more Compre Bien stores in the second half.

Ashley's other main business, Apollo, the Glasgow window blind retailer, contributed £2.27 million to profits, £1.37 million in the second half. Apollo provides an earnings stream to offset the advance corporation tax burden on the group's divi-dends, and the business is being developed in Europe.

Ashley's balance sheet is strong and the group is expected to have gearing of about 10 per cent at the yearend. Ashley may suffer from the perception that it is a company which grows only by acquistion and while Spanish food retailing acquisitions will be considered, the group says it has no plans for a rights issue.

The shares, up 4p to 92p, are trading on a p/e ratio of 10.5 times, assuming pre-tax profits of £12.5 million, and are half way between their high and low point for the last 12 months. Assuming Spain is the growth market many believe it to be, the shares should perform well in the long term but could have a bumpy ride getting there.

Waterford workers to continue strike

WORKERS at the Waterford crystal plant of the troubled Waterford Wedgwood group have voted to continue their strike. The 2,300 workers at Waterford's three plants went on strike over management cost-cutting plans when the company stopped bonus payments for 500 glass cutters. Mr Paddy Galvin, Waterford chief executive, said: "I earnestly entreat the union leaders to meet me and my colleagues . . to try to resolve a highly dangerous and traumatic impasse."

Waterford Wedgwood, hit by a slump in the US and British markets, made a pre-tax loss last year of Ir£20.6 million (£20.05 million) with accumulated debts of Ir£125 million, In March, a group of investors led by Mr Tony O'Reilly, chairman, of HJ Heinz, the food group, and Morgan Stanley, the New York investment bank, took a 29.9 per cent stake in the group. Waterford was unchanged at 30p.

James Beattie Profits slump makes £8.8m at Chrysler

THE Midlands department store group James Beattie produced pre-tax profits of £8.8 million for the year to January 31, against £8.01 million previously. Trading profits were down, but cash balances earned interest of £2.5 million against £1.63 million before. Earnings per share were 12.51p (11.25p) and the final dividend is 3.8p, making 5p (4.5p).

A SHARP fall in firstquarter earnings due to the slump in the US car industry was reported by Chrysler Motor Corporation. Profits fell from $351 million in the first quarter of 1989 to $71 million after a fall in sales from $9.6 billion to $7.5 billion. Profits in 1989 as a whole were down to $315

COMMENT)

CBI paints a picture of less stag' more 'flation

he pattern which emerges from the latest quarterly industrial trends survey of the Confederation of British Industry is one of less stag' more 'flation.

The good news is that there is no sign of slow growth in the economy turning into recession. The bad news is that price pressures are high and rising.

Factory orders are up a little and output in the next four months is expected to increase slightly, though more of industry claims to be operating below capacity. Although many firms still think their stocks are too high, the decline in output appears to have bottomed out.

Part of the reason for this tolerable situation is the buoyancy of exports which are still rising quite strongly. A balance of 14 per cent of firms said they were more optimistic about higher overseas sales than four months ago. Given present cost pressures that is good news especially after the latest trade figures.

On inflation it is difficult to know whether to feel gloomier or be mildly reassured. Prices are rising strongly with more companies reporting price increases both in retrospect and prospect. This is worrying news.

But prices are still rising more slowly than costs. The implication is that company profits are being squeezed, and this in time should exercise pressure further up the pipeline curbing the level of pay increases.

Meanwhile, the effects of the squeeze are bound to be unpleasant. As the survey shows, investment is likely to fall with a balance of 8 per cent of firms expecting to spend less on plant and machinery in the next 12 months. This must be bad for industry's longer term competitiveness, though the fall is from a high level reached in the previous boom.

The other obvious area in which to economize is on staff. Manufacturing employment is likely to fall more steeply with a net 22 per cent of firms expecting to reduce employment in the next four months.

This is part of a trend which has been going on for much longer than the present downturn, but it reinforces the view that the Government is facing an electorally inconvenient reversal of the long fail in unemployment overall.

Big players in smaller game

he lack of turnover on the Stock Exchange, where trading is reported to have fallen by up to a half on the none too busy levels of a year ago, seems to be evoking a different response this time.

Instead of big new entrants such as Morgan Grenfell or Chase Manhattan pulling out of their main securities operations, there has thus far been a more general but more subtle pulling in of horns among firms that made a considered decision to keep going in the first round of retrenchment.

This has been most manifest in the unhappy experiences of James Capel, the leading research house that opted at Big Bang to stick to stockbroking in equities. This apparently successful early policy has been put under enormous strain by the shortage of turnover and the drive to cut commissions. Capel has recently suffered progressive losses of high profile staff in the wake of the disagreements between former chairman Peter Quinnen and the parent Hongkong Bank.

Pru-Bache, the latest to cut staff, is something of a sad case. It was one of the earliest foreign financial groups to move into the Exchange, by backing a new broking firm in 1984, and eschewed the massive me-too ambitions and spending of others in the approach to Big Bang.

But the cautious long-term approach has still not avoided the perils of winning too little business.

The big players, a few of which have been making respectable profits until recently, will want to sit on good shares of available business while the market sorts itself out.

It remains to be seen whether all will have the nerve and financial resources to do so indefinitely. Switches and heavier trading in gilt-edged stocks, the traditional quid pro quo for dull share markets, have notably failed to materialize: the gilt-edged market is sicker than equities.

More attention will now also be focused on the Japanese houses, especially the all-conquering Nomura, which have hitherto been able to build up long-term market share in London on the strength of huge profits in Tokyo.

Those domestic profits are likely to look sick this year, prompting a review of overheads worldwide. But saving face may play a more important role than it has for American groups pruning ailing peripheral businesses to stem losses in their own home market.

No BDA payout after £1.5m loss

By Matthew Bond

BDA Holdings, the London housebuilder and developer, is not paying a final dividend after reporting a £1.55 million pre-tax loss.

The company has been in difficulties for some months and did not pay an interim dividend. In 1988, it made £889,000 pre-tax profits and paid a 3.5p total dividend.

Last year, BDA built more than 160 homes but still has almost 100 unsold. Its exposure to London makes its problems particularly acute. Turnover in the year to January fell 29 per cent to £6.08 million, while margins dis- sture appeared. The company turn ed in a £1.27 million operating loss, after writing down the value of its land bank and part of the interest paid on the unsold houses. Mr Brian Duker, the chairman, said write-offs totalled £228,000.

Interest charges rose 58 per cent to £290,000. However, gearing has been reduced from 135 per cent to 75 per cent.

A tax credit and a £912,000 profit on the sale of an investment property reduced the attributable loss to £96,000. Net assets per share fell 17 per cent to 67.2p a

Rave for the Sky utives John Mitchell, Chris

Long and legendary England World Cup captain Bobby

Moore have always relished a challenge, including putting together their aborted America's Cup challenge in 1988 with Peter de Savary. And after Tony Berry's downfall as Blue Arrow's chief executive, the three of them decided to go it alone, calling their company, appropriately enough, Challenge Group. One of its biggest challenges to date kicked off yesterday at the Oxford House Youth Club in Bethnai Green, East London, with the launch of Satellite Jukebox, a project designed to raise at least £500,000 for Youth Clubs-UK. It will culminate in a 12-hour disco dance marathon on November 3, beamed to 1.5 million youngsters in clubs across Britain and Europe by Sky Television, in conjunction THE unbundling of British with MTV. out that it is certain to delay GrandMet's attempts at reducing its high gearing levels, which have been causing a lot of concern in the City.

The GrandMet share price was also upset by talk that Nomura, the securities house, had reduced its profits forecast for the current year. But Nomura says it is sticking with its original estimate and that it remains a buyer of the shares. Elsewhere, the rest of the equity market continued to regain some of the falls that saw the FT-SE 100 index dip through the 2,100 level at the start of the new account on Monday. The appearance of a few bargain hunters in thin con-

per cent of the company's voting share capital. Glaxo continued to reflect recent advances with its own anti-Aids drug, climbing 16p to 762p, helped by overnight buying in the US.

The annual meeting for shareholders at STC passed without the much talked about profits warning. Mr Arthur Walsh, chairman, was in confident mood telling shareholders that the company had met its profit targets for the first quarter. "I believe that profits for the whole year will be satisfactory", he added.

The share price managed to recoup most of Monday's sharp fall with a rise of 9p to he 1989 results were a record, and we exceeded £1.5bn pre-tax profits for the first time. Pharmaceuticals and Agrochemicals both had an excellent year and Colours and Fine Chemicals. Specialty Chemicals and Polyurethanes also did well. But it was a challenging year, with two distinct phases. During the first half demand was at record levels. In the second half growth rates slowed, particularly in the housing, construction and automobile markets in the UK and in North America. Businesses primarily involved in these sectors, that is, Paints, and Industrial Products including Explosives, ended up pretty well level pegging with 1988, but with good profits nonetheless.

There were some disappointments. Films had a difficult time. The Fertilizer business managed to contain its losses but was not able to get back into profit in spite of rationalisation in Europe and the actions we have taken in the UK and Canada.

Overall, the 1989 results demonstrate the value of a carefully focussed, robust portfolio and we are now seeing the benefit of the many changes we have made in recent years.

Sharpening our competitive edge

Change will continue. We are focussing single mindedly on activities where we are, and will continue to be, world competitive—technically, commercially and territorially. In 1989 we made nearly 50 acquisitions and divestments. Among those being completed this year I would highlight the acquisition of the Atlas Powder Co. This will give the ICI Explosives business a strong presence in the United States, thus completing our comprehensive coverage of the world's major markets. We also increased capital expenditure to more than £1bn and continued to invest in new businesses, such as Seeds, Advanced Materials, Imagedata and Biological Products.

At the same time, we have maintained very satisfactory financial ratios and increased research expenditure to almost £640m. Our return on net assets puts us amongst the world's most profitable chemical companies, but we are still able to devote sufficient resource to ensure our innovative capability for the future.

All of which are convincing reasons for recommending a final dividend, which at 10% above the previous year will be the seventh consecutive annual increase.

Opportunities worldwide

We are living through a period of historic change. Events in Eastern Europe have moved with incredible rapidity and, if adequate political solutions are found, there will eventually be a massive additional market for our products.

ICI has employees and offices in virtually all the East European countries, and we are well positioned to grow our business.

We must also take action in Asia Pacific markets, where around 40% of chemicals expansion in the next decade will occur. Since 1986 we have approved investment of more than £100m in Japan and last year we approved investment of £200m for plants in Thailand and Taiwan, where growth prospects are also good.

There are thus three major trading blocs for ICI products. North America, where we are now powerfully established. Europe, where we are thoroughly entrenched and ready to take advantage of EEC and Eastern European potential. And Asia Pacific, where we are investing strongly.

ICI and the environment

I have been much concerned in recent years that we should achieve steady improvement in our health and safety at work, and in our environmental performance.

As far as safety is concerned the Group's performance has improved significantly. Accidents in 1989 were 25% down on 1988. Nevertheless there were three fatalities. Each has led to a most demanding search for means to prevent re-occurrence.

We must also seek a significant improvement in our environmental performance where there is enormous change in public expectations. I believe there is a real imperative for ICI to be "World Class" in an environmental sense as well as in its business performance. This is how we are going about it.

First, we have placed improving our environmental performance high on the management agenda, with results being regularly monitored by the Board. ICI people and their families live in the community, often close to our plants, and we all share environmental concerns.

Second, we are intent on reducing emissions from our existing plants, for example with new waste recovery plants. The level of investment and the rate of improvement in these areas will increase. We are also working with our customers to help them solve their waste problems by, for example, re-cycling CFCs and plastics.

Third, we are paying the closest attention to the environmental aspects of new plant design. Our new ammonia process has won the Pollution Abatement Technology Award, and has been chosen to represent the UK in an EEC-wide Awards Scheme. Our FM21 cells, for producing chlorine and caustic soda without using mercury, have just won a Queen's Award. Quietly, we are building a competitive edge in environmentally friendly technology.

Fourth, we shall continue to invest in research to increase our understanding of environmental issues. New facilities are being added to the Environmental Sciences Unit at Jealott's Hill and a £3m extension to the Group Environmental Laboratory at Brixham will open this year.

Fifth, we are bringing forward products which will reduce environmental concerns. We are leading in the difficult task of finding a substitute for CFCs in refrigeration and air conditioning. ICI's first plant should be completed by the end of the year. ICI resins have won the 1989 Dutch environmental award for 'Environmentally friendly products' and we are hoping for a favourable reception to the launch of our biodegradable plastic 'Biopol'. Changed public attitudes present us with new business opportunities where we can marshal technological resources to produce products which can turn our wish for a better environment, into reality.

Investing in Britain's future

Let me turn now to research, where in 1989 we increased our expenditure to about £640m. Over the last five years our research manpower has increased by 35% and we now have about 14,000 scientists and technologists. Their efforts are the principal source of innovation and the mainspring for our future growth.

It is also a very special UK asset. Our research represents 7% of manufacturing industry's R&D and science based companies like ICI are rare in this country. Two thirds of the UK's total civil R&D is carried out by only twenty companies who, in turn, are major exporters. If the UK is to continue to play a significant part in world trade, these resources have to be nurtured and applied internationally.

ICI research covers biological science and polymers and materials science from which the major growth areas of the 90s will spring and it has an academic funding programme which supports more than 50 University projects. Today's new products — drugs such as 'Diprivan' and 'Zoladex', and agrochemicals products such as 'Karate' and 'Force' — reflect investment made 5-10 years ago, when we began to increase the proportion of the Research budget which went into the biological sciences. We have stepped up our commitment to biotechnology — a powerful enabling technology for pharmaceuticals, plant breeding and agrochemicals.

This year's Queen's Awards are good evidence of ICI's inventiveness and our ability to convert it into valuable business. Besides the Award for the FM21 chlorine production cells, Awards for technological achievement have been made to ICI Colours and Fine Chemicals for a new class of polyester dyes; and to ICI Cellmark Diagnostics, jointly with the Lister Institute for Preventive Medicine, for discovery and development of genetic finger printing.

Awards for export achievement have been won by ICI Agrochemicals, which has doubled its exports in the last five years and to Cambridge Research Biochemicals, which was acquired by ICI in 1989.

Vision and change

ICI began life in 1926. Sixty three years on we are thriving, have grown into the UK's biggest manufacturing company and the super league of the world's chemical companies. This suggests outstanding staying power.

The first quarter results bear this out with profits before tax amounting to L414m — a considerable rebound from the depressed fourth quarter of 1989, but some L28m below the first quarter of 1989. Bearing in mind the more difficult economic conditions today by comparison with the early part of last year, this performance can be regarded as encouraging. Particularly noteworthy was the strong profit growth of the Bioscience businesses. Pharmaceuticals, Agrochemicals and Seeds, which achieved trading profits of L216m compared with L151m in the first quarter of 1989.

At this stage it is difficult to predict the outcome for the whole of 1990, but barring any further sharp economic downturn I believe that the strength of our business portfolio should ensure that we have a reasonably satisfactory year — and we shall continue to pay close attention to costs, as I urged in the autumn of last year.

The period ahead may be uncertain but I would emphasise that we are better prepared than at any time in our history both to seize opportunities and to embrace change. The strategic re-direction of the 80s has allowed us to enter the new decade in excellent shape, with much improved financial ratios, better productivity, stronger Research and Technology and a much more balanced, more international portfolio. We have the people too, men and women of all nationalities, who are the ultimate, enduring and vital competitive advantage of this Group.

I am convinced that the single factor which will ensure that ICI will continue to grow profitably worldwide, is the application with determination, consistency and farsightedness of those policies which are relevant to the times in which we live. It is our ability to anticipate change and adapt to it that has allowed ICI to flourish. We have exited the 80s with record profits and clear strategies which will carry us forward into the next century as one of Britain's very few genuinely international, science based, world competitive companies.

Maine-Tucker

TO MOVE WITH THE TIMES....

...You need enthusiastic and accurate advice on excactly how to set about getting where you want to go!

Maine-Tucker was set up to prove that it is possible to provide Clients with a superlative recruitment service, at the same time providing Candidates with exactly what they set out to achieve. Why are we able to achieve this where others fail? As with most things, it boils down to the people in our company and the fundamental difference is that Maine-Tucker train all their Consultants from scratch, they have not been exposed to the traditionally "Sales" mentality of other recruitment operators and therefore work as proper Consultants whose earnest aim is to provide you with the ultimate recruitment service. Consultants do not work under the hinderance of targets, or on pure commission and therefore their judgement on your behalf is unbiased, and our results

We work throughout every field of business and every single company is visited on behalf of our candidates to ensure that we understand exactly what it is that their particular job has to offer.

Underlying this original approach, Maine-Tucker offer all their Clients a 3 to 6 month 100% full refund guarantee. You may be wondering why we are talking about Clients' fees top you, the Candidate. As a candidate, our basis for dealing with Clients offers you the biggest advantage because if our candidates are not happy with the job they have got through us we receive no money and so you can be reassured that we have to get you the right job. - to ensure that we remain in

We make it or personal aim to achieve your aim and are genuinely interested in getting you into the right company at the right time with the

So, if you want to set your sights high and have some secretarial skills, no matter how fast or slow (becaused we do many jobs that are not wholly secretarial), call us today for a private appointment or visit us at the London Secretarial Show on Stand Number 330 or turn to page 35 to see some briefs that we are currently working on.

French for Kent Fire Chief PROCESS: //HROUGH Fire Brigade Headquarters - Maidstone PERFORMANCE Grade D Salary range £10,200 - £13,200

Kent Fire Brigade, one of the busiest in the country, is a dynamic and forward-looking organisation. This is an excellent opportunity for an experienced PA with conversational French to support the work of our Chief Fire Officer - a high profile role not only in the Department and County, but nationally and, with our growing European involvement, demanding high level contact and liaison with continental colleagues: hence our insistence on conversational French.

Ideally between 25 and 40 years of age, you will have some three to five years experience as a PA in a dynamic multidisciplinary environment. Naturally your secretarial and office management skills will be of the highest standard even under the severest pressure. Tact, diplomacy and a rofessional presence will be among your personal qualities.

Our Headquarters are set in an attractive country environment and in addition to a starting salary dependent on qualifications and experience, we offer a generous rewards package.

For further details and an application form, contact Chris Swan at Fire Brigade Headquarters, The Godlands, Tovil, Maidstone, Kent ME15 6XV. Telephone Maidstone (0622) 692121, ext 266. Closing date 18th May.

Penny's empire

The back of Penny Pike's hand is black and blue with a series of urgent felt-tip messages written on it. She apologizes for detaining me, but would I accept coffee while she transmits a long and urgent fax to Richard? I sit in her outer office, waiting. It is a houseboat on the Grand Union

I am not altogether surprised at the surroundings. Somehow, a floating personal assistant fits perfectly naturally into the unconventional and informal image of the Branson empire. Penny, finally freed from the fax, relates that she left school with seven O levels, went to secretarial college, and began working in the stultifying bore-dom of the conveyancing section of a solicitors' office. But at least, she says, it taught her accuracy; you did not dare make a typing mistake as Tipp-Ex did not look well on legal documents.

But the low point of her secretarial career, she believes, came when she worked at a leading advertising agency, and caught herself reading a book one day because there was nothing to do. "I thought that was despicable; the job was obviously unnecessary and therefore fairly worthless." Between long holidays of travelling cheaply around Europe and managing a villa in Greece, she

because you can never get stuck earth, which encourages you to try into anything, and you always get the feeling that the temps are given the worst jobs." She was saved by a friend pleading with her to go to Virgin Records superstore at Marble Arch, then just opened. Working up from a shopfloor job that had little to do with shorthand and typing but everything to do with selling records, she eventually became Mr Bran-son's PA 13 years ago. "I don't know how it happened; Richard just suddenly appeared one day and asked if I would like to work

'One call from Richard can wreck my plans for the evening'

It was initially terrifying. "The first thing he asked me to do was to find a band to back Julie Covington, who was singing on Thames TV that night. I hadn't the faintest idea what to do, so I asked him how you found a band. He said he didn't know. I just had to ask around until I found the

Mr Branson, one suspects, knows very well how to assemble a band at a few hours' notice. "Richard is very imaginative, but also very human and down-tothat much harder. Also, you know that if you fail to do something he'll do it himself. And your pride won't let you put up with that."

Dedication to the job has contributed to divorce for Penny. 'The hours can be really, really long, you just have to put them in to get the job done. Whatever I have planned for the evening, one call from Richard can wreck it."

Like many PAs in key jobs, Penny rarely travels with her evermobile boss. Her job is to hold the fort while the master is absent. But she says she could not now ever work for anyone else. "If I left this job it would be because I wanted children, or to set up my own business - or more likely both at the same time."

To be a successful personal assistant, Penny calculates, requires being very much in tune with the boss. Always be polite, but always make him feel very confident. "And whatever job within a job you are asked to do, always do it, and never feel it is

One of the qualities required does not appear to be immaculate shorthand; Penny confesses that hers has declined from 110 words a minute to "a pretty rusty state". She can, on the other hand, boas what must be the ultimate proof of having arrived at the top of the secretarial tree, Penny Pike has

million secretaries are male, according to Warwick University's Institute for Employment Research (Joan Venner writes). Leading employment agencies, however, say the number is slowly rising. "I think it's partly office technology," says Pauline Kent, Reed Employment's public relations manager. "Men are more comfortable with the idea of sitting behind a computer terminal than the standard typewriter."

An agency that prefers not to be identified puts forward another reason: "As more women are reaching senior management, the role situation is changing. It is something of a novelty for them to have a male secretary." Males, however, can be intimidated by having a male secretary and may feel awkward because they cannot treat him as they would a woman, Although the idea of the "office wife" is dying out, there are still men who expect secretaries to buy presents for their wives and collect the dry cleaning. They hesitate to ask another man. Few women would waste their secretaries' time in such a way.

Most male secretaries prefer to

Job criteria not just £s

Secretaries have a wide selection of job opportunities, writes Beryl Dixon, but which field should a newcomer choose?

ecretaries have never had it communications and even so good. It appears from the abundance of job advertisements that applicants are spoilt for choice. There are openings with all kinds of employers for every grade of secretary, from college-leavers rwho in London can now com-mand between £9,000 and £11,000 - to the top PA carning well in excess of £30,000.

Second-jobbers in particular are in short supply and able to get £14,000-£16,000 with little difficulty.

The shortage of good secretaries means that the well-qualified can now afford to discriminate between employers — who are responding in the main by offering higher salaries and perks. That is fine if those are the applicant's prime considerations. Other employers — who can be worth checking out — are also offering better training and career development.

Many of them provide training in word-processing, use of per-sonal computers and desk-top publishing as a matter of course, while others send their secretaries on courses in time-management, assertiveness training - generally a sign that they envisage the job developing into a true PA role or a stepping stone to management.

What kind of person really has the pick of the job market?
Obviously sound technical skills are a must. Good typing and shorthand go without saying. Then comes word-processing. If a secretary is trained in two or more of the most commonly used ones, that is a distinct advantage although if he or she is suitable in every other aspect, employers will cross-train.

Languages are an asset - but not as great a one as might be expected with 1992 just around the corner. It all depends on individual employers. Some are still rigidly mono-lingual; others are frantically looking for secretaries fluent in other languages. The latter should come to be in greater demand in the next few years. Languages are a particular advantage when applying for some jobs, particularly in property, law and international business,

For the very top jobs, technical skills must be backed by experience plus social and communication skills. And anyone possessing all of the above should be in a buyer's market. On the other hand, some areas are perennially popular. More secretaries want to get into advertising, PR, market-ing and the media than into anything else. Competition for employment in such sectors is fiercer — and salaries can be lower.

Very few secretaries actually choose a job on salary grounds alone. Location, status, working conditions, and the boss (in few other jobs can the one-to-one relationship involved be quite so crucial) all play a part. But there are some for whom, other things being equal, it comes down to a choice between jobs based on

In that case, where are the best paid jobs? Naturally enough, there is a premium in financial services where, according to Crone Corkill, the recruitment agency, the pool of interested, suitable candidates is smaller and employers have to offer more. Next come property, large law firms and some branches of industry where the image is rather unglamorous. By contrast, a salary survey carried out by the Gordon Yates Group concluded that salaries were generally lower than average in the arts, media and publishing.

In advertising and marketing, salaries were average with interest-ing variations. These showed that the smaller companies paid their middle managers' secretaries better, while the larger ones paid their senior secretaries higher, than the average.

It should not be forgotten that benefits can increase the total salary package considerably. Free meals, season ticket loans, medical insurance and pension schemes all add up, while at current interest rates a subsidized mortgage can be worth from £2,000 to £4,000.

Boss can learn from show

on the information to be displayed

esearch has shown that secretaries and PAs are responsible for a billion pounds worth of direct business expenditure a year, and are probably a major influence in the expenditure of much more business cash. At the London Secretary Show at Olympia 2, which starts today and runs until Friday, a host of exhibitors will be competing for their custom.

Nick Needs, managing director of Blenheim Pel, which has organized the show, urges secretaries to bring their bosses along. "Our aim," he says, "is not only to provide hands-on experience of up-to-the-minute information and technology and to help secretaries and their bosses to become winning teams, by better understanding of each other's needs, but also to provide a great day out."

So often an executive delegates the running of the office to a top secretary/PA who makes the rou-tine purchasing decisions, is asked an opinion on a new wordprocessor, sees to the boss's travel arrangements, and arranges the catering for an office party. If this is done well, the PA may ul-timately organize official enter-raining and company conferences. Secretaries at the London Secretary Show, now in its fourth year, will be able to examine computers and peripherals, and talk to systems manufacturers.

The secretary also will have an opportunity to discuss the

Talking shop: secretaries can speak to systems manufacturers employer's needs with travel agents, airlines, car-hire firms, hotels, caterers, couriers, parcel services and employment

One of those who went to the show last year was Anne Marie Humphries, then a secretary, now a sales administration officer with Courage's. She intends to go again. "Every secretary should have an opportunity to attend," she says. Last year there was a communications system which most secretaries would normally never get to see. My boss got one when I told him about it."

In 1989 secretaries were asked to fill in a questionnaire on the 10 top irritations in the office. This year, those who attend (20,000 are expected) will have a chance to hear an analysis of the results. Bosses should turn up, too, and discover what most gets under the skin of their secretary. Some, one hopes, will turn over a new leaf.

A major change this year is that instead of queuing up, the secretary can pre-book for one of the seminars organized by the Industrial Society and the Institute of Qualified Private Secretaries.

One important seminar will cover the implications of 1992 for secretaries and PAs. Information will also be available about translation services. Other topics will include the boss/secretary relationship, stress management, confidence building, working for a small business versus a large corporation, diplomacy, business travel and finance for women.

Secretary Shows are also to be held in Birmingham (May 26-28), Glasgow (September 11-13), and Manchester (November 6-8). Further details and programmes are available from Blenheim Pel Ltd. Blenheim House, Ash Hill Drive, Pinner HA5 2AE (01 868 9933).

P.A./SECRETARY Seeking to be a Marketing Executive Up to £16,000 p.a. to commence

The Divisional M.D. of a prosperous and rapidly growing, quoted company needs a P.A. with first class secretarial skills, who wishes to establish a career in the marketing/creative sector.

The company, which is involved in audio/visual and professional photographic goods, is situated very conveniently only one minute away from a Piocadilly Line Station in Central London. The working environment will be informal, friendly and offer ample opportunity to express one's individuality. Only 50% of the role will be purely secretarial, whilst the remainder will centre around helping to establish and promote the company's image. This is a truly varied and exciting position, It will suit those aged around 28/45 with good shorthand/W.P. skills and a desire to make the best use of their initiative, intelligence and creativity. Some experience of having worked in the marketing sphere, probably in a secretarial capacity, will be of additional interest.

If you wish to learn more about this role, please write, enclosing an up to date c.v., which will be treated in the strictest confidence, to:-

"What has changed is that many British and American companies are beginning to realize that languages are becoming increas-ingly useful because they have a bigger range of clients."
With takeovers on the Continent and increasing City activity, many legal firms are advertising for people with languages and legal experience. Vacancies far outnumber suitable applicants. Bilingual secretaries are required by firms of all kinds engaged in import/export, by architects. advertising companies, merchant banks and other financial Opportunities are good overseas, too. Sheila Burgess, of Sheila Burgess, Recruitment Consultants, says that Paris is feeling the effect of 1992 even more than London. The major service industries, particularly legal and financial, are looking for British secretaries with fluent French.

Languages must be at least of graduate standard. For candidates with A levels this means a twoyear course, with time spent in the appropriate country.

West Kent College in Tonbridge offers such a course (one year for graduates), attracting students from overseas as well as from the UK, which is mutually beneficial. Students are regularly awarded medals by the London Chamber of Commerce.

Fieldwork in the appropriate country is an integral part of the course. This spring, seven left for Paris, four to work for American and French legal firms and three for the Franco-British Chamber of Commerce. Another two went to Spanish students have placements in Spain.

Many students are offered permanent posts by the firms with which they undertake their field-work, including Theodore God-dard, the Paris law firm. One recent student is in Germany with the Hong Kong Trade Dev-elopment Council. Her two bosses, one German and one Chinese, do not speak each other's language, and all communication is in English via their secretary.

While most secretarial jobs with languages are based in London and certain large cities, a sprinkling can be found locally in container and import-export

The language content of a bilingual secretary's job, particularly in the UK, is not always as high as the secretary would wish. But languages are increasingly useful. "Another language," says Mary Overton, senior management adviser with the Industrial Society, "gives you an edge over other secretaries."

Last year, the society held a conference in association with the European Association of Pro-Secretaries (EAPS).

Some secretaries from the Continent complained that too often when British secretaries telephoned, they began the conversa-tion in English. It would be more polite to ask, in the appropriate tongue, "Do you speak English?" and cominue from there, they

New skill gives documents style

1. The sale I have a

Secretaries in the Eighties faced a minefield of acronyms before they could decide whether they had the necessary skills to apply for a new job, let alone do the job (Geof Wheelwright writes). Notices such as "See req. with WP, WS and DOS experience" in temping agencies mystified many.

Just when they thought they had trained themselves in every concrivable new word-processing package and were well on top of the acronyms, along comes enother one. The letters are DTP - "desktop publishing".

DTP is the business of using computers to produce newspaper or magazine-quality documents using simple desktop computers and high-quality computer printers. Anyone able to use a desktop publishing system properly will be able to take a standard report and num it into something special through the use of headlines, captions, newspaper-style col-umns and computer graphics.

Using DTP, a lifeless annual report can be presented in the style of a glossy magazine,

There are a few problems, however. Not the least of which is that many employers expect too much too soon, and for too little. Secretaries are often expected to produce "designer" documents without being given any basic grounding in design or typography.

As people in the general business community begin to become aware of just how good business documents can look using DTP technology, they will begin to demand that it be introduced in their offices. Here are a few simple words of advice. Use the documentation included with the DTP software. Send key staff on a desktop publishing course and read the course brochures carefully, as some still do not provide any basic design advice. Employers must understand that desktop-publishing a document takes longer than simple word-processing. Once the design is established, it can often be re-used for future documents and turn-around times can be improved. There are three basic stages to desktop publishing. The first is keying-in the text, the second is to establish the basic design. This includes setting up the column widths, headlines and picture placement.

The final step is to place the word-processed text into the desktop publishing system and assign type specifications, enter captions and carry out final proofing of document. The completed document is then printed on to a computer printer, most popularly the "laser" printer.

It may sound simple enough, but desktop publishing will require background and skill. If staff need DTP, employers must make sure they are given the necessary instruction before wading in.

At the London Secretary Show last year, secretaries were given a list of likely irritations in the office, and asked to state which bothered them most.

When the responses were analysed, the four top irritations were: constantly being interrupted when they were busy, finding the photocopier jammed or out of paper, trying to fix meetings with people who did not keep their diaries up to date, and being given urgent work just as they were about to go home. Ginny Tate, of Tate

Appointments, agrees with the last, "Some bosses do not plan their day. The secretary may sit doing little from nine to three and then there is a mad rush from three to eight.

A second secretary may work with a group of bosses. Sometimes she is faced with ten urgent demands and sometimes with nothing. Of course, she ought to be the one to get them together to establish a system of priorities."

At the very base of the list of irritations came sexual harassment. Much has appeared about this in the Press, but Rita Betts, of the Institute of Qualified Private Secretaries, says she has never known a secretary who experienced this form of harassment boss is crucial. Failure to VDU screens, badly designed delegate can be a common source of grievance. Many bosses insist on dealing with matters which are better left to their secretaries, and some refuse to accept that their secretaries can do more than answer the telephone, take down dictation and make coffee. She says that secretaries should be working with their managers and not for them. Secretaries need information, and the most obvious way of getting information is by asking the manager.

If a secretary is to be happy at work, the attitude of the

Secretaries often tell ber: "But he is always so busy." They must, she maintains, learn to be more confident and assertive. Most managers say: "If only secretaries would tell us when they see problems ahead rather than make excuses afterwards for things they have not done."

Many environmental stresses, the Reed survey found, stem from lack of thought and foresight on the part of the employer. Of course, some, such as heating, can be expensive to put right. but other problems are more simply solved.

The secretary should not,

Getting to grips with new technology requires a basic understanding of what each machine does and how it is best used

Probably the most widespread new addition to the modern office is the facsimile or "fax" machine. This can be described as a "photocopier over the telephone". It allows documents, diagrams, pic-tures, letters and agreements to be sent via the telephone line, eliminating much of the need for couriers and express

Now Renting. Breathing Space at Greenland Passage.

ONLY TEN MINUTES from the City of London, Greenland Passage is a place where fresh air and watery surrounds create a feeling of open space. The superbly designed interiors are spacious too.

But with current high interest rates, we recognise you may need breathing space from a long term mortgage commitment. Which is why renting is now a sensible proposition.

And when you can move into the Eaton Square of Docklands' at the heart of the New London, sensible becomes downright attractive.

Greenland Passage offers a selection of quality flats, townhouse and penthouses overlooking one of the most dramatic stretches of the river.

RESIDENTIAL PROPERTY

By Christopher Warman Property Correspondent

Recent legislation has made the letting of property an attractive business proposition once again

The time to take in a lodger

ment Department launched a campaign last week to encourage householders to take in a lodger, it brought along a real live example to show that the system works, Christopher Chope, the junior housing minister, introduced Robert Somerville, who lives in a maisonette in south-west London, and his lodger, Paul Dixon, at a press conference, indicating that the lodger has been considered an almost extinct breed for 20 years.

The reason was the rent controls that were introduced in the 1960s to prevent exploitation of tenants by landlords.

The 1988 Housing Act lifted those controls, enabling the householder and the lodger to work out an informal agreement between them and — important for the householder — denying the lodger security of tenure.

Under their arrangement, Mr. Dixon has a room and shares the bathroom and the kitchen, paying £35 a week, and this includes all bills except telephone and community charge.

Mr Somerville said: "Our arrangement works well, but I would warn people not to expect a perfect lodger."

Mr Dixon responded: "I would encourage people to take lodgings, but you have to expect problems with the landlord."

Delicate questioning elicited the fact that the two, who otherwise get on well, find an occasional battleground in the kitchen over the piles of dishes waiting to be washed up.

Mr Chope, with the practical experience of being a lodger and somebody who has taken in a lodger, is enthusiastic in recommending the renting out of a spare room. "It can help both the householder and the person requiring accommodation," he said. "It provides extra cash to help with bills while providing a home for someone wanting to come to London, or any city, to work or study, who often finds it hard to get a room."

He called on organizations to set up registers listing rooms to let and people wanting rooms, and showed that the department has

"who are quite happy to dis-patch their employees to dif-ferent areas of the country for

The trend has been reflected in the number of longer lets returning after a panic period, during which both landlords, waiting for a purchase offer, and tenants, waiting for a change in interest rates, demanded tenancies of about six months.

Hamptons' regional offices con-firm that landlords are resigned to a longer wait for buyers and are willing to look at one-year

tenancies, and individual and corporate clients realize lower interest rates are some time off.

Hamptons says more movement of individuals throughout

In London, by contrast,

already answered the call by setting up a board in the foyer. "We believe there are tens of thousands of rooms that could be used for lodgers, which would help to ease the difficulties of finding a room, and would certainly help job mobility," Mr Chope said.

One of the main obstacles in the way of providing "digs" has been the fear that the lodger will not term, often to six months. There is also an identifiable new sector, the "between houses" people reluctant to buy at current interest rates who opt instead for a six-month to one-

Kensington, says that although

One problem is that landlords are liable to up to twice the booklet, Want to Rent a Room?, published by the department and the Welsh Office to explain the system, makes it clear that changes in the law mean that "if someone lives in your home and shares accommodation with you, he or she has no right to stay on when you want him or her to go".

It says: "The person sharing is in the same position as a lodger. The arrangements can easily be ended, as your lodger has no legal rights to stay after the agreed period."

In the past, too, some mortgage lenders were against the letting of spare rooms, but now they do not object as long as they are in-formed. The householder does not normally need planning per-mission or other official approval unless the intention is to take several people in,

There is one thing the householder must remember: he or she must add any profit from a lodger to other income, and income tax will be payable if the total of taxable income exceeds the tax allowances. There is the possibility of setting expenses against income but the general rule is that only those expenses incurred "wholly and exclusively" for the purpose of the lodgings can be deducted from income before tax.

These could include the cost of food if provided, and a proportion of household expenses such as heating, water rates, insurance and repairs.

Cottages are not normally associated with London's fashionable Knightsbridge, but Regency Cottage is a fine and rare property in Rutiand Gardens, a private cul-de-sac. The cottage, built on two floors, has three bedrooms, two reception rooms, a two-bedroom staff annexe, a garden at the front, a courtyard at the rear and private parking. The agent, Chesterfield, is asking £1.1 million for the freehold, pointing out that the community charge in the Borough of Westminster is only £195, almost the lowest in the country.

IN THE MARKET

■ The Firs, a Queen Anne farm-house in Fen Drayton, Cambridgehouse in Fen Drayton, Cambridge-shire, was sold by auction through Browells, of Cambridge, for $500 exactly 100 years ago. It is on the market again through the same agents, with a rather different price - £300,000. The four-bedroom house has five acres and in the grounds there is an early 18th-century timber-framed barn, which, which permission, could be con-verted into an office, a studio or a verted into an office, a studio or a separate house.

E Central London buyers pay a premium for period and new houses. Number 16, Cottesmore Gardens, Kensington, is a new house, a rare thing in the area, with the period look of its town-house terrace neighbours and the latest construction and insulation stan-dards. The 5,800 sq ft house has a 34ft double-aspect drawing room, a dining room library, a conservatory, a family room, a main bedroom suite and four other bedrooms. Beauchamp Estates and Knight Frank & Rutley wam £3 million.

The walled gardens at Wadstray House, Dartmouth, Devon, were laid out between the wars by Viscount Chaplin, who brought rare plants from overseas. They adorn the eight acres of the Grade II listed five-bedroom Georgian house. Jackson-Stops & Staff at Exeter is asking more than £500,000.

with summer weather: but it is not merely for the weather that Jonathan Whittington will remember Eton's meeting with St Edward's. St Edward's batted with reasonable comfort to 57 for two, when Whittington was brought into the attack. Bowling slow left-arm, in a spell of 7.3 overs, of which four were maidens, he demolished St Edward's, taking eight for three. Eton found no difficulty in making the runs for the loss of only one

There was less interest when Harrow travelled to Winchester. The visiting team made its way to 205 for nine before declaring at tea. The Wykehamists made a dart for the runs, but lost too many wickets and settled for a draw at 103 for eight.

FOR the second year running, not out in their total of 206 for April fixtures have been blessed three, against Pocklington. Pocklington made a spirited reply and were only bowled out for 161 in the last over. On Saturday at Repton, Richardson, of Oundle, had six for 43 bowling fast medium, with a good leg cutter. Repton were all out for 167, but in a day when the bowlers were on top. Oundle slipped behind the clock and settled for a draw on 126 for six.

in contrast, at Radley, only seven wickets fell with over 400 runs being scored. Robinson made 119 of the home team's total of 239 for four. Wellington the visitors, started well, but Cookson, their free-scoring lefthand batsman, was well caught in the gully and after his departure, try hard as they did, they could not quite maintain the momentum and the match Repton won handsomely in was drawn, with their total of midweek, Paulett making 105 172 for seven.

Carson undecided over Guineas ride after Rami gallop

By Christopher Goulding

RAMI was confirmed a definite challengers. Machinvellian and runner in the General Accident Septieme Ciel, both worked well 2,000 Guineas after pleasing connections on Peter Walwyn's Lambourn gallops yesterday. Ridden by Willie Carson, the Riverman colt worked well with Hateel and Muwfig, leaving the Scot with a difficult choice between Rami and the Dick Hern-trained Elmaamul for Saturday's classic.

"He will certainly run after that," Angus Gold, Hamdan Al-Maktoum's, racing manager, said, "We cannot finalize riding arrangements until Willie has made up his mind but Michael Roberts is on stand-by to ride the one which Willie rejects."

Corals reacted to yesterday's gallop by reintroducing Rami into their list at 25-1. Rock City was again supported from 16-1 to 14-1 with the same firm. Ladbrokes keep Rami at 25-1 but pushed out Carson's alternative mount to that price from 20-1.

Corals also had money for the Ian Balding-trained Dashing Blade, the winner of last sea-son's Dewhurst Stakes. He was laid to lose over £50,000 and is now a 20-1 chance from 33-1.
Ladbrokes also report further interest in Pat Eddery's mount Now Listen, backed from 7-1 to

France's two 2,000 Guineas

on the Piste des Reservoirs at Chantilly yesterday.

Machiavellian outpaced his regular working companion, Robin Des Bois, in a seven-furlong workout, leaving Francois Boutin more than pleased with the 13-8 favourite. Criquette Head worked Septième Ciel over seven furlongs with Funambule, her runner in Sunday's French 2,000 Guineas, the pair finishing up-sides. Mme Head believes Machiavellian is the one her colt

Cauthen makes wrong choice

has to beat at Newmarket.

STEVE Cauthen made a rare error of judgement when elect-ing to partner Mesleh for John Gosden in the Oval Maiden Stakes at Nottingham yesterday instead of riding Admiral Byng for Heary Cecil.

Admiral Byng, ridden by Paul Eddery, led all the way to beat Cauthen's mount, the 11-4 on favourite, by 2½ lengths. David Eddery, racing manager for Admiral Byng's owner, Charles St George, said: "Steve thought ours was a bit immature. So he alturned for Meelah."

Arm problems put Niven out for season

PETER Niven, the National Hunt jockey, is to have a bone graft on his arm, which was broken in a fall at Haydock in March, and will not ride again March, and with hot ride again this season.

Niven was able to return to the saddle four weeks after the fall when a plate was put in the injured arm, but he is concerned that he could suffer lasting damage if he were to take

Record prizes at Redcar

REDCAR will have record prize-money of £500.000 this year when the Racecall Gold Trophy, won last year by Osario. will again provide the climax to the season. Entries for the £100,000 two-year-old race, to be run over six furlongs on October 30, close on May 16. Attendances at the Cleveland course last year, when a multimillion pound stable and grandstand complex were opened, showed an increase of 21 per cent on 1988. A new course enclosure, costing almost £1 million, is due to be opened at the Spring Bank Holiday fixture on May 28-29.

SUPERB physical specimens. Wonderful natural athletes. Land of Hope and Glory as the three black Brits take all three medals in the 200 metres at the Commonwealth Games: how perfectly splen-

"You get very limited and very little racism within sport in this country," Colin Moynihan, the Minister for Sport, said. "That's the beauty of sport." "There is no racism in our sport," Tony Ward, the spokesman for the British Amateur Athletics Board, said.

Sport has ever been the domain of Utopianists: people who believe that the perfect society already exists in miniature: in sport. Here, at last, we have life as it should be. Wars are waged without malice or murder, sport is an island of fairness in a unfair world; sport is the land of heroes where all men are brothers. No barriers of nation or race or social background disfigure the fair prospects of the bountiful land of sport; here is a freemasonry of excellence; a freemasonry of rancourless struggle; the land of shared efforts, shared pain, shared joy. God is in his heaven, and all is right with the world of sport.

The most powerful evidence for the Utopianist view is the number of black people who have achieved such great things for British sport. I learn from a television programme to be broadcast tonight, Inside Story: the Race Game, (BBC-1, 9.30), that 4 per cent of Brits are black, and that blacks make up 50 per cent of the national athletics squad and 25 per cent of the cricket and football teams. The programme challenges with great force the smug notions these figures provide for the Utopianists. Professor Ellis Cashmore, of Aston University, gives a view of the same phenomenon: "Social deprivation breeds sporting prowess." He adds: "If you live in the ghetto and have blocked opportunities. and you don't see that you've got a chance in any other area of society, sport surfaces as the one area in which you just might make it. There is a glimmer of hope there—and you take it."

Sporting performances are quantifiable. This is most particularly true of track and field athletics. People argued for years that black footballers "lacked heart", but there is no arguing with stopwatches and tape measures. The world may be full of inequalities, but all men are equal once they get to the starting blocks.

Sporting excellence has, therefore, become a natural avenue of advancement for British, and for that matter, American blacks. Thus we have been asked to admire "natural athletes". Black people are "better equipped physically", we are told, for explosive running and jumping, for running enormous distances, for certain positions in football, for fast bowling, for is natural ability . . . It is plain to see that all this is simply an updated version of "they gotta great sense of rhythm". However, as Cashmore points out, it is a myth that black people seem to have taken on board themselves: that they are physiologically better equipped for certain sports than are

The tribute to black ability has a catch - as do all tributes from whites to blacks. The unspoken corollary to the theory of blacks' "natural ability" is that it involves a trade-off in abilities in other areas. History is full of instances of the replacement of one racist theory by another. The myths tend to be contradictory, but they always have the same conclusion: that blacks are inferior to whites.

Let us start with the obvious: Hitler said Aryan races were superior in every respect to other races. Jesse Owens famously gave the lie to that in the 1936 Olympic Games. A white victor would have proved white superiority, but a black victor also proved white superiority.

This is because physical prowess was reinterpreted as proof that blacks' phsyical - animal - nature ensures that they are less developed mentally; "lower on the Darwinian scale", as someone once expressed it to me at a charming dinner party, showing a complete failure to understand Darwin, as well as

Men of science have shown the same tendencies as demotic racists. In 1890, it was "proved" that blacks were inferior to whites because whites retain the physiological traits of infancy more succesfully than do blacks.

By 1926, scientific opinion had changed. In that year, it was proved that blacks are inferior to whites ... because whites do not retain infantile traits as much as do blacks. Different science, same

Let me quote Stephen Jay Gould, professor of palaeontology at Harvard and masterful writer on scientific subjects. "There is not now and there never has been any unambiguous evidence for genetic determination of traits that tempt us to make racist distinctions [difference between races in average values for brain size, intelligence, moral discernment and so on]. Yet this lack of evidence has not forestalled the expression of scientific opinion. We must therefore conclude that this expression is a political rather than a scientific act - and that scientists tend to behave in a conservative way by providing 'objectivity' for what society at large wants to hear." The genetic fallacy has been dramatically expressed by another scientist, Richard Lewontin: if the holocaust occurs "and only the Xhosa people of the southern up of Africa survived, the human species would still retain 80 per cent of its genetic variation.

All of which brings us back to sport. British blacks are not better than whites at sport because of some Darwinian law. They are simply people who have spectacularly inferior opportunities for seeking excellence in other fields of endeavour.

To quote Cashmore, from the programme, once again: "Sport is very much a litmus test, in the sense that when you see blacks succeeding in numbers in sport, it is usually a fairly reliable indicator that race relations are not going too

Racist myths are like dragons' teeth: when one myth is exploded another 10 take its place. Every myth is different: but always the conclusion is the same,

The series, in this first season, will consist of six tournaments, ending with the NM English Open at The Belfry in August. After Wentworth, 10 players will take part in each shoot-out. Little prize-money is involved, which suggests that wheels within wheels have been set in motion to attract a field of set in motion to attract a field of such quality. MINOR Counties excelled themselves yesterday, reaching a total of 273 for two that was the highest they have ever made in the Benson and Hedges Cup. In normal circumstances, it would have been a winning score. Alas for them. Sussex batted supremely well.

Paul Parker played the crucial, it not the highest innings of the day, an undefeated 86 which included 12 fours. Quite properly, though, the gold award went not to him but to Malcolm Roberts. whose 121, containing 12 fours and a six, set the standard for others to follow on his home ground.

Eddic Barlow, following yesterday's defeat by nine runs against Glomorgan in the Benson and Hedges Cup match at Cardiff, which leaves them with little chance of qualifying for the quarter-finals.

Gloucestershire bowled tidily enough, to restrict Glamorgan to 219 for nine after they had been 157 for two just before lunch, but had no batsman to match the home captain, Alan Butcher, whose innings of 45 gave his side a total which proved just sufficient in the face of a late flourish from Russell.

There was new record match aggregate for the competition of 613 at Taunton, where Somerset, despite piling up 310 for three. Hardy making 119 and Rose 64 from 46 balls, scrambled home by a mere seven runs against Derbyshire.

The Brabham grand prix dynasty

Family business: David Brabham, in the Repco BT20, with his father, Sir Jack Driver follows famous father

By John Blunsden

TWENTY years ago, Jack Brabham climbed out of one of his Formula One cars for the last time, ending a career as a grand prix driver and car constructor which had brought him three drivers' and two constructors' world championships and 14 individual grand prix victories. Next week, he will be back again, watching the youngest of his three sons, David, aged 24, making his Formula One debut in a Brabham car at Imola, Italy. The team is no longer "in the family", Sir Jack, as he sub-sequently became, having sold it in 1970. It has since passed through several hands and, in recent months, has been the subject of bitter ownership disputes which almost brought it to its knees. However, it is now on the rails again, owned by the Middlebridge Group, and David is considered to have landed as good a seat as he could have hoped for as a newcomer. On Sunday week, he should win his first race in Formula

Little brother Gary has just made a false start: he joined the new Life Formula One team for its debut in Phoenia last month, but, after failing to qualify either there or in Brazil, he parted company with the team, which he consid-ered lacked both direction and a proper level of professionalism. For Sir Jack, Sunday week should see the fulfilment of a long-beld ambition. "Once my three sons decided they wanted to be racing drivers rather than to be racing drivers rather than farmers, my goal was to see at least one of them in Formula One." he said yesterday, when he and David were photographed at the Brabham head-quarters in Chessington with the Brabham Repco BT20, which Sir Jack lest drove in 1967

Macari arrested in dawn tax raid

In the latest episode in the tangled controversy at Swindon Town, Lou Macari, the former manager, and three other people connected with the second division club were yesterday arrested in a dawn raid for suspected Inland Revenue offences.

· Macari, Brian Hillier, the former chairman, Colin Calderwood, the club captain, and Vincent Farrer, the former accountant of the club, were all being interviewed last night by officers of the Inland Revenue, who also visited the club during the afternoon.

It is understood that the Inland Revenue has been investigating a number of football clubs across the country over the past few months and it is possible that further arrests, not connected with the inquiry at Swindon, may take

A spokeswoman for the Inland Revenue said: "We cannot talk about the amounts of money involved, although obviously they are substantial. We are bound by strict rules of confidentiality which prevent us from talking about individual tax affairs.

"The four arrests were made after prolonged tax investigations. Clearly before the arrests were carried out, a lot of groundwork was done and this has culminated in the joint operation between the police and the Inland Revenue.

"The operation was organized by an Inland Revenue Special Investigations Unit based at Bristol and it is a major inquiry."

Macari, who was also manager of West Ham United until he resigned in February, was arrested in Manchester, Calderwood at St Austell, Cornwall, where Swindon had been playing an exhibition match, Hillier at his home in Caine, Wiltshire, and Farrer at his home at Blunsdon, near

Only Smith responds as 'inept' Hampshire succumb to Surrey

By Alan Lee Cricket Correspondent

THE OVAL (Hampshire won toss): Surrey beat Hampshire by 87 runs

ONE-day cricket habitually vields bizarre extremes, but Hampshire, unsteadily launched on a season of heady expectation, will be mortified if they descend even once more to the depths they explored yesterday. Surrey's bloodless victory contained a record Benson and Hedges Cup score for any match involving two first class counties. There was also a century for Darren Bicknell and, later, some delightful leftarm spin from Keith Medlycoit. The indelible feature, however, was the utter awfulness of Hampshire's cricket until Robin Smith decorated a blissful evening with a century of such force that Surrey briefly quaked. Hampshire's private ambitions are boundless this season but after losing their first two zonal games, they must surely forget this competition. For their future peace of mind, they must also forget this particular performance. Their acting captain Paul was the bowling of eccentric millionaires and slapstick fielding to mock it. Surrey's total was four more than the previous record. which had stood for 18 years, but, in truth, a decent club side might have made a few. Even Marshall, on whose stature Hampshire were bound to lean, erred unacceptably with nine no balls and a wide. Shine emerged with four wickets but the rest might prefer to remain nameless.

Bicknell's innings was calm

"But there has to be some kind of minimum and I do not believe that some of the fanciful methods of adding and deducting runs is the right way to go about it. That would mean lampering with the game too much and I would have thought the best method was to fine the offenders fairly given priority subject to form. Those that went really did appreciate the hard work that was put in and realized that it brought some reward. I am very pleased at the reception we have had since we came home but the fact remains that it was still a defeat. Having said that I do believe we are going the right way about putting England back on the right lines. But we must continue to prepare as carefully for every Test series."

Stewart pointed out that England will have to leave for Australia in the autumn only some four weeks after the end of the present season. "That is not really long enough to do all we would like but we are stuck with the fact that the schedules have been drawn up. and we will have to stick to

By booking in advance, it will be possible to view the treasures that are there; to respond to the atmosphere; to walk through the Long Room, as all the great players have from W. glorified in print. For more than 200 years, MCC has been its untiring guardian, and it is to widen public interest in the game, as well as to tap a valuable source of income, that Sir Denys Roberts, president of the club, threw open the doors, as it were, at a lunch in the Long Room yesterday.

Tours will be available on most days of the year (barring Test matches and cup finals, or when the ground is being prepared for such special occasions) and will start at the Grace Gates. Some guides have been recruited from Wembley Stadium (where they do a similar sort of job in the football season), some from drama schools and some from within the membership of MCC.

First off, at 10 o'clock this morning, are 90 pupils (girls as well as boys) from Clark's School in Bristol. If he remembers, and his old back has one of its better days, Denis Compton, himself one of the legends of the place, will be there to meet them.

The pavilion, the third to be built on the same site, was handed over to the club 100 years ago yesterday. The first, dating from 1814, was destroyed by fire on the night of July 28, 1825, a few hours after Winchester and Harrow had drawn stumps. The second, built the following winter, was finished in time for the anniversary dinner on May 11, 1826. The foundation stone of today's pavilion was laid on September 17,

1889, by Sir Spencer Pousonby-Fane, the club, with more than 5.000 members, having outgrown the second. The silver pestic and mortar used by Sir Spencer were on display yesterday. This great "cathedral of cricket", as Sir Robert Menzies called it, now a listed building, was used less than eight months later for the club's annual general meeting. Its cost, including furniture and extras, was £21,000.

Structurally, it remains virtually the same as when it was open. What has changed, to judge from the time being taken to complete the Compton and Edrich stands, is the degree of commitment within the building trade. The days of the horse-drawn vehicle were a lot more efficient and dependable, it seems, than those of the sub-contractor. As the president suggested yesterday, such feats of industry as went into building the pavilion a century ago in so short 2 time might very well not be

shines From David Hands Rugby Correspondent Rovigo Italian XV .. England XV ..... THE inevitable end-of-term feeling that had long lingered over this fixture in the Battaglini Stadium was partially relieved yesterday by individual performances from some of those players with most to gain.

Despite England's lineout being almost totally crased, the backs managed to create the opportunities for victory. though not without considerable difficulty, by four goals. two penalty goals and a dropped goal to a goal and three penalties.

Those three-quarters had Back and Wells to thank for sustaining momentum in considerable heat and before an enthusiastic Italian crowd.

Back, the young Nottingham flanker who on Sunday was playing for the Under-21 XV against Netherlands. seems to blossom in sunny climes. Last season he sweated his way to three tries in the under-21 international with Romania, played in the heat of Bucharest, and yesterday he collected a try in the most senior game he has yet played in his burgeoning career.

Having picked Oti to tour Argentina in July, the England management were eager to see him rediscover his appetite after a year away. The Wasps wing's first run, understandably uncertain, made 25 metres and earned a penalty; his second brought him En-
